Safe Splashdown Ends Skylab-1's Record Mission

ABOARD THE USS TICONDEROGA, June 22 (AP).—The Skylab astronauts, completing a mission which started with the threat of failure, returned to earth in "supershape" today from man's longest space voyage.

Capt. Charles Conrad jr., Lt. Comdr. Joseph P. Kerwin and Comdr. Paul J. Weitz ended 28 days in orbit with an on-target landing in the Pacific Ocean, about 830 miles southwest of San Diego, Calif.

Despite physicians' concern about their condition after their four weeks in weightlessness, the spacemen felt well enough to walk, wave and laugh as they strolled with unsteady steps across the deck of this prime recovery vessel.

"They look quite good," a doctor of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration said.

The astronauts went to a mobile medical laboratory for extensive examinations.

They had left in orbit a repaired space station which is ready for the planned 56-day missions of the Skylab-2 and Skylab-3 crews. When the Skylab-1 crew boarded the laboratory in orbit 28 days ago, it was overheated, underpowered and seemed destined for failure. But the astronauts patched up the spaceship.

They also completed 80 percent of their assigned scientific experiments. They brought back with them biological specimens and thousands of feet of film and tape which experts believe will provide new knowledge about the sun, the earth and man himself.

'Intense Pride'

President Nixon hailed their accomplishment as "a source of intense pride for the American people."

"You have given conclusive evidence that even with the most advanced scientific and technological support in the world, the courage and resourcefulness of good men are still central to the success of the human adventure," the President said in a telegram.

Capt. Conrad, Comdr. Kerwin and Comdr. Weitz undocked their Apollo spacecraft from Skylab early this morning and started their homeward journey from 275 miles above the earth. They guided the Apollo through a series of rocket firings which slowed it down as it soared back to earth.

Three orange-and-white parachutes opened above the craft at 10,000 feet, and the nylon canopies lowered the fire-streaked Apollo to the accurate splashdown.

"Everybody is in supershape," Capt. Conrad said as the craft bobbed on the water.

The Apollo returned from space through a heavy layer of clouds which obscured the view of hundreds of sailors lining the deck of this aircraft carrier.

Helicopters flew over the Apollo, dropping swimmers who attached a flotation collar and a sea anchor.

The Ticonderoga's skipper, Capt. Norman K. Green, positioned the 42,000-ton carrier alongside the three-ton spacecraft in gentle waves. A line was attached and 25 sailors hauled it in to pull the spaceship close to this 900-foot-long vessel.

They Get a Lift

A crane lifted the Apollo, with the astronauts still inside, 25 feet to a platform on an elevator deck.

Because of concern about reconditioning the astronauts to life on the earth's surface, stretchers had been provided to move the astronauts from the Apollo to the medical laboratory.

But medical tests by Comdr. Kerwin, a physician, established that the spacemen did not need to be carried.

Capt. Conrad, then Comdr. Weitz and finally Comdr. Kerwin climbed through a spacecraft hatch while the ship's band played "Anchors Aweigh" for the all-Navy Skylab crew.

The astronauts, wearing flight suits and blue baseball-style caps,

White House Memo Says Deal Rejected

Hunt Reportedly Wanted $1 Million for Silence

By Peter Osnos

WASHINGTON, June 22 (WP).—President Nixon said on March 21 that a demand from Watergate conspirator E. Howard Hunt jr. that he be paid as much as $1 million for his continued silence about White House-initiated intelligence operations was "wrong, that it would not work [and] that the truth would come out anyway," according to a Senate Watergate committee memorandum.

The demand for money was relayed by then White House counsel John W. Dean 3d, according to the memorandum, which is based on information supplied the committee by the White House.

The President's response, the memorandum states, was: "How could it [the money] possibly be paid, what makes you think he would be satisfied with that?"

The memorandum was offered as a summary of the President's meetings with Mr. Dean from April, 1972, until April of this year. Included are 37 meetings or telephone conversations that the White House says Mr. Nixon had with Mr. Dean between Feb. 27 and April 22 of this year.

Mr. Dean reportedly has told Senate investigators and federal prosecutors that he discussed aspects of the Watergate cover-up with Mr. Nixon or in Mr. Nixon's presence on at least 35 occasions between January and April of this year. Mr. Dean, however, has not yet made those allegations under oath.

The White House version of those meetings disputes Mr. Dean's by stating that he did not tell Mr. Nixon until March 21 that a number of White House officials probably knew either about the bugging in advance or participated in the cover-up.

One of the charges reportedly made by Mr. Dean is that the President told Mr. Dean at a meeting shortly before the sentencing of the seven Watergate defendants March 23 that there would be no problem paying $1 million to the conspirators for their continued silence. That money, Mr. Dean has supposedly told investigators, was in addition to $460,000 paid to the conspirators that Mr. Dean contends the President knew about.

The White House account of a discussion about the payment of $1 million, which it says took place on March 21, deals with Hunt's demand for money. The Senate memorandum says that Hunt was trying to blackmail [presidential aide John D.] Ehrlichman about Hunt's prior Plumber activities unless he was paid what ultimately might amount to $1 million."

The "Plumber" reference is to the White House "special investigations unit" set up in July, 1971, after the publication of the Pentagon papers, to plug news leaks to newspapers. Hunt was a member.

Mr. Ehrlichman has admitted knowing that Hunt broke into the Los Angeles office of the psychiatrist of Daniel Ellsberg, who leaked the Pentagon papers to the press, but Mr. Ehrlichman did not report that break-in to police.

After the President told Mr. Dean that the proposal for $1 million would not work and the

Holds Treaty Does Not Apply

Costa Rica Refuses U.S. Plea To Extradite Financier Vesco

SAN JOSE, Costa Rica, June 22 (Reuters).—A Costa Rican criminal court today rejected a U.S. request for the extradition of American financier Robert L. Vesco.

Judge Atilio Vincenzi ruled that an extradition treaty between Costa Rica and the United States did not cover attempted fraud—the offense alleged in the U.S. request.

U.S. Ambassador Viron Vaky has five days to appeal the ruling.

Mr. Vesco allegedly sent a cable from the Bahamas to New York last year ordering the transfer of $250,000 to his personal account from his American company and putting it down as company expenses.

The company president refused to do it.

Mr. Vesco was indicted by a New York grand jury last month for allegedly trying to influence an investigation into his financial affairs by the Securities and Exchange Commission by making a secret contribution of $200,000 to President Nixon's re-election campaign.

Also indicted in the case were former Attorney General John N. Mitchell and former Commerce Secretary Maurice H. Stans.

The SEC accused Mr. Vesco and 40 others of "looting" $224 million from the Geneva-based Investors Overseas Services, which he took over in 1971.

Mr. Vesco came here to live last year and has invested heavily in Costa Rica.

Mr. Vesco's present whereabouts are unknown. Costa Rican authorities have said that he left the country several weeks ago.

South Vietnam Fighting Falls To Lowest Point in 5 Months

From Wire Dispatches

SAIGON, June 22.—Fighting across South Vietnam fell to its lowest level in five months today, the Saigon command said.

A communiqué from the command listed 57 Communist truce infractions during the 24 hours ending at dawn. It was the third straight day that reported incidents had dropped far below the recent average of 100.

Meanwhile, a Vietnamese believed to be a war veteran burned himself to death in front of the Saigon cathedral. His motive was not immediately known and he was not immediately identified.

On another front, a weekly liaison flight which is supposed to shuttle observers between Saigon and Hanoi was canceled in a dispute over passenger safety procedures.

It was the second straight week that the U.S. Air Force C-130 failed to take off, although the recent communiqué signed in Paris to strengthen the cease-fire that began Jan. 28 explicitly calls for "frequent and regular" flights between the two capitals.

The plane normally carries a four-party joint military team which has been charged with exhuming the remains of American dead and verifying the status of 1,300 Americans missing in Indochina.

The team, which has its headquarters in Saigon, includes

Left-Wing Peronists Blame Party's Rightists for Shooting

By Jonathan Kandell

BUENOS AIRES, June 23 (NYT).—Left-wing Peronists today denounced some of the closest aides of Juan Peron in what appeared to be a rapidly growing split among followers of the former president and dictator.

Leaders of the left-leaning "Peronist Youth"—a nationwide organization that claims 200,000 members — accused conservative "killers," allegedly hired by trade-unionists and "para-police" forces of provoking the outbreaks of shooting during Wednesday's homecoming celebration for Mr. Peron, which resulted in 20 deaths and more than 400 injuries.

Peronist Youth spokesmen singled out retired Lt. Col. Jorge Osinde and Norma Kennedy as the leaders of the right-wing groups which clashed with leftist supporters of Mr. Peron at the rally.

Both Col. Osinde and Miss Kennedy have been among the closest political advisers of Mr. Peron and have played an increasingly conspicuous and important role in recent weeks as aides of the aging leader.

In a strong law-and-order speech last night calling for national unity, Mr. Peron appeared to be siding with moderates and conservatives in his movement.

Although he did not attack left-wing Peronists directly, he used the terminology and slogans of his more conservative followers.

He blamed the shootings on unspecified people "trying to infiltrate" his movement—an accusation often hurled at Peronist leftists by conservative trade-unionists.

Mr. Peron did not mention any of the socialist slogans of the Peronist Youth and guerrilla organizations.

Instead he called on all Argentines to "gamble their destiny within the scale of established values: first the fatherland, then the Peronist movement and then the men."

"We will lift a flag equidistant from both of the dominant imperialisms," said Mr. Peron in a statement strikingly reminiscent of the right-wing Peronist slogan, "Neither Yankee nor Marxist."

The former president also made several conciliatory references to the armed forces—the focus of anti-Peronism in the country ever since they removed Mr. Peron in a coup 18 years ago.

If the armed forces are willing to back the "established constitutional order," said Mr. Peron, "sooner or later they will be integrated with the people, who would welcome them with open arms."

World Court Asks France Not to Hold A-Tests in Pacific

From Wire Dispatches

THE HAGUE, June 22.—The World Court today asked the French government to suspend nuclear testing in the Pacific Ocean.

Acting on requests for an injunction against the tests filed by Australia and New Zealand, the court voted 8-6 in two identically worded decisions to ask France to avoid nuclear tests which would cause radioactive fallout on the two nations.

The court voted first on the Australian request in a morning session, then voted on New Zealand's request in an afternoon meeting, changing only the names of the requesting country and territories from the initial decision.

Australia and New Zealand had asked the court for an injunction against further French atmospheric nuclear testing at Mururoa Atoll in the South Pacific, 4,000 miles east of Sydney.

In Paris, a French Foreign Ministry spokesman said, "I am authorized to recall the well-known position of France which is not to admit the competence of the International Court of Justice in this affair, which relates to a matter of national defense."

France boycotted the court hearings.

Foreign Minister Michel Jobert told parliament this week that the tests would continue because they were needed to develop France's nuclear deterrent force as a guarantee of the country's independence.

Australian Prime Minister Gough Whitlam said in Canberra, "It is my hope and expectation that the French government, which has a long tradition of respect for international law, will act in accordance with what the court has ordered today."

Australian Attorney General Lionel Murphy said the decision "places an awesome burden on the French government if it goes ahead with its testing." He said "the decision makes it clear that continuation of the tests would be morally indefensible... and would be carried out in defiance of the highest judicial tribunal in the world."

The French government has not said when the next testing would be conducted.

French opposition leader Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber said in the Tahitian capital of Papeete yesterday that the French government plans six or eight nuclear atmospheric tests this year and must start them by the end of July.

The court said that, pending a final decision, "the governments of Australia and France should each of them insure that no action of any kind is taken which might aggravate or extend the dispute."

It said Australia and France should submit written depositions about the court's jurisdiction and the admissibility of the application, within three and six months respectively.

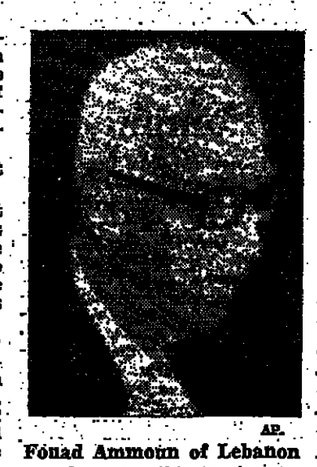

The court, the judicial arm of the United Nations, consists of 15 judges elected for nine-year terms by the General Assembly and the Security Council. Its decisions in cases which parties submit on matters related to the UN Charter are advisory opinions and binding only between the parties concerned. If either party fails to follow the judgment of the court, the case may be brought before the Security Council.

The six dissenting votes demonstrated a strong division of opinion about the court's jurisdiction within the panel.

Entering his dissent, for example, Judge Luis Ignacio-Pinto of Dahomey asserted he found the interim measures "legally unjust, or in any event without sufficient basis."

"By directing the French government to avoid nuclear tests causing the deposit of radioactive fallout in Australian territory... the court certainly overstepped the limits of its powers," he declared.

Mr. Ignacio-Pinto said it was his view that deciding the illegality of nuclear tests "exceeds the competence of the court and becomes . . . a political problem."

Wimbledon Boycott Is On

LONDON—The boycott of the Wimbledon tennis tournament by the leading male players became "final and irrevocable" yesterday as 68 players withdrew from the competition before the draw. Only three previously seeded males—Ilie Nastase, Jan Kodes and Roger Taylor—will participate.

The angry women players, who had earlier demanded an increase in purse money, will all be in the event though late Thursday they formed their equivalent of the men's players' association.

But 99.99 Percent Vote in Moscow

Local Council Elections Spur Little Excitement in Russia

By Murray Seeger

MOSCOW, June 23.—Loudspeakers across the city violated the warm air and sunshine of a June Sunday as disembodied voices followed the playing of patriotic music.

"Comrades," an unseen speaker called, "this is election day. Everyone must do his duty and vote. The polling places are now open."

Because such warm-weekend days are a special bonus in a northern city of short summers, the citizens arrived early to pick up their marked ballots and drop them into the boxes. They had plenty of time left to get to the parks to enjoy their day off.

Voting did not take long because the Soviet system makes it simple to exercise the limited franchise given everyone over 18.

This year's election was for members of local and district councils (Soviets) across the country and in some areas for local judges and members of the national parliament (Supreme Soviet) where vacancies existed.

As usual, there was only one ticket facing the voters—"the candidates of the people's block of Communists and nonparty members." And, as usual, they scored a smashing success.

The local newspapers reported that in the city of Moscow 99.99 percent of the voters cast ballots and that the designated slate got 99.99 percent of the votes. The only surprise was the report in a regional newspaper that one chosen candidate failed to get a majority vote.

"Additional elections will be held in that [unnamed] district," the newspaper Leninskoye Znamya said. There was no word about proposing a different candidate.

Voting against the designated candidates is not easy, as could be seen at one neighborhood polling place in central Moscow.

When a voter entered the site and registered his presence with the clerks, he was handed a ballot with the single candidate's name printed on it. He simply had to drop it into the box to vote "yes."

A negative vote could be made only by crossing out the candidate's name: there is no alternative choice. Two private booths were available for those who wanted them, but using them would immediately lable the voter as different from the majority.

"Some people write comments on their ballots, usually to complain about some local problem," a middle-aged Muscovite explained. "But they usually just drop them in the box."

Lack of Tension

From observation, the polling place had all the atmosphere of an election except the excitement and tension of a contest.

The voting culminated a steadily built-up campaign to interest people in the election and to direct that interest into increased economic activity in what is called the "decisive" year of the current five-year plan.

In every neighborhood, "agitpunkts" were opened from which party agitators distributed information about the candidates and the process of voting. A report by the newspaper Vechernaya Moskva on an election meeting of the Moscow party committee said: "It was emphasized at the meeting that the agitation work during the remaining days must be concentrated at voters' apartments. Every Muscovite must be reminded that the elections will be held on June 17 from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. He must know where he will have to vote and for whom."

Little Agitation

The house calls were apparently ordered because of a notable lack of interest in the voting. According to Izvestia, several agitators recorded in their books the report: "Everything was normal. No visitors."

Across the country, there are 50,000 local councils made up of more than two million members. More than nine million persons were involved in operating the machinery that elected them.

Set up on a neighborhood basis, the Soviets are composed of individuals who work or live in the districts. Just under half are women and 46 percent were nominated for the first time.

Retarded Youth, A Protestant, 16, Slain in Belfast

BELFAST, June 22 (UPI).—A 16-year-old Protestant who was mentally retarded was killed last night in Belfast as sectarian violence claimed its 830th victim in Ulster since 1969.

Police said that even by talking to David Walker, found shot between the eyes and in the chest in a darkened street in the Roman Catholic Lower Falls area, it was easy to see that the boy was educationally subnormal.

Police said the Walker boy—who disappeared from his home in the Protestant Belvoir area of Belfast yesterday morning—was a prison officer's son.

They discounted the theory that he was a victim of the IRA threat three weeks ago to kill prison officers and their families because of their treatment of prisoners.

Meanwhile, most of Northern Ireland's political leaders today welcomed yesterday's speech by Irish Republic Premier Liam Cosgrave in which he pledged to encourage reconciliation between Roman Catholics and Protestants in Ulster.

Political commentators believed Mr. Cosgrave's speech would provide a major boost for the province's moderates in next week's elections for a new provincial assembly. Mr. Cosgrave said he was ready to recognize the new legislature and do "everything" to end bloodshed in Northern Ireland.

U.S. African Drought Aid

WASHINGTON, June 22 (UPI).—President Nixon told the United Nations yesterday in a letter to Secretary-General Kurt Waldheim that the United States has committed $24 million to help six drought-stricken African nations and "stands prepared to commit further resources as needs are identified."

walked on deck with doctors hovering at their elbows. The spacemen smiled and waved at cheering sailors while walking across the 66-foot-long red carpet.

Both Comdr. Kerwin and Comdr. Weitz received slight steadying support from the doctors as their steps faltered a bit.

The doctors wore surgical-style face masks, a measure of precaution against contamination by either party.

Comdr. Kerwin seemed the most bothered by the reintroduction to gravity. He wobbled slightly and walked with a wide gait.

Dr. Lawrence F. Deitlein, deputy director of life sciences at the Johnson Space Center in Houston, said in the Texas city, at a news conference, that preliminary findings showed the astronauts in excellent health.

Better Than Expected

"They look quite good," he said. "Far better than I expected."

He said that preliminary tests showed Comdr. Kerwin suffered the most evidence of cardiovascular deconditioning, a temporary ailment caused by long exposure to weightlessness. He said that Comdr. Kerwin's blood pressure and heart rate dropped after splashdown and the astronaut inflated a pressure device which prevented blood from pooling in his legs.

"This was not unexpected because we did see some deconditioning in tests made during the flight," he said.

Officials were elated with the scientific findings of the Skylab-1 crew. The astronauts experimented for hours, using medical devices and cameras trained on the earth, the sun and distant star fields.

"Scientists have already seen things they never suspected about the sun," said William C. Schneider, director of the Skylab project.

Included in more than 30,000 sun photographs are pictures of a solar flare—a massive explosion on the sun. They are the first solar-flare pictures taken from space by a manned telescope.

The astronauts also took earth-resources photographs, using a powerful battery of sensors, over 31 states and nine countries. They photographed thunderclouds and crop lands over the United States, volcanoes in Latin America and a vast Pacific Ocean storm called Hurricane Alma.

But the Skylab-1 accomplishment that Capt. Conrad and many officials regard as the most significant is the salvage of the $294-million Skylab space station.

Without the repair work of the crew, the space station, a key and essential element in the $2.6-billion Skylab program, would have been useless.

The troubles of Skylab began 63 seconds after it was launched on May 14. As it left the Cape Kennedy launch pad, an aluminum shield for protection against the sun and meteorites ripped away.

Without the shield, the space station's hull baked in the sun and temperatures inside climbed to 125 degrees. As the shield shattered, it carried away one solar power panel wing and jammed the other. This cut the space station's electricity by more than half.

The launch of the astronauts was delayed 10 days while engineers fabricated a makeshift sun shade and Capt. Conrad, Comdr. Kerwin and Comdr. Weitz trained themselves to install it.

The astronauts were launched May 25 and quickly installed the parasol-like shade. Temperatures inside the space station dropped to the upper 70s.

Later, Capt. Conrad and Comdr. Kerwin performed a space-walk repair of the power wing. The astronauts cut debris jamming the wing and then used brute force to snap the solar panel into place. This restored sufficient power for a near-normal mission for the remainder of Skylab-1, and also made possible the 56-day missions of Skylab-2 and Skylab-3, which are to begin in July and October.

The astronauts made a number of other repairs on Skylab equipment.

to prevent the development of situations capable of causing a dangerous exacerbation of their relations, as to avoid military confrontations, and as to exclude the outbreak of nuclear war between them and between either of the parties and other parties."

Moreover, each party agrees to "the premise that each . . . will refrain from the threat or use of force against the other party, against the allies of the other party, and against other countries, in circumstances which may endanger international peace and security."

The signatories undertake to observe these principles in "the formulation of their foreign policies and in their actions in the field of international relations."

Article Four—perhaps the heart of the joint pledge—says:

"If at any time relations between the parties or between either party and other countries appear to involve the risk of a nuclear conflict, or if relations between countries not party to this agreement appear to involve the risk of nuclear war between the United States and the U.S.S.R. or between either party and other countries, the United States and the U.S.S.R., acting in accordance with the provisions of this agreement, shall immediately enter into urgent consultations with each other and make every effort to avert this risk."

The agreement also declares it shall not impair the right of either country to "individual or collective self-defense."

At a briefing, Mr. Kissinger was asked pointedly about its application to China, with which the United States seeks to improve relations. He avoided a direct answer, but said, "We have no intention of being an arbiter between the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China."

At another point, however, the President's national-security adviser said, "clearly under this agreement the use of force against another country which would have wide repercussions would be precluded."

For its part, the United States hopes the agreement will serve as a further means of reassuring the Chinese that Washington has acted to restrain the Russians, since it binds both signatories to a promise to avoid the risk of war.

A General Proposition

Mr. Kissinger was asked whether he consulted with the new Chinese liaison officer here before the agreement was concluded. Again he avoided a direct response, saying "The United States consulted with several countries, but I don't want to go into enumeration."

He said the accord would not apply to American bombing in Cambodia, since the Indochina war began before the understanding was reached.

But he also said, "As a general proposition it is not possible under this agreement for either side to use force in circumstances that can threaten international peace and stability without breaking the letter and spirit . . .".

He said Moscow provided the "original impetus" for the accord but added that "both parties made a substantially equal contribution."

The U.S. and Soviet leaders later today went to San Clemente, Calif., to continue their summit meetings at Mr. Nixon's West Coast home.

The White House announced that Mr. Brezhnev and Mr. Nixon will greet the three returning Skylab astronauts in San Clemente Sunday.

The Soviet leader is scheduled to spend the weekend at San Clemente, then go to Camp David, Md., Sunday night before leaving for home, by way of Paris and more talks, on Monday.

He will deliver a television address to the American people Sunday night.

Pompidou, Brandt Agree

ferences on the proper tactics and methods of conducting such a dialogue remain.

West German spokesmen said today that Bonn still thinks that Mr. Nixon, when he visits Europe in the fall, should visit the headquarters of such international organizations as NATO, the Common Market and the West European Parliament. Implicit in this is the idea that Mr. Nixon might be joined by other European leaders, thereby turning such a visit into a summit meeting.

Mr. Pompidou's spokesmen replied that France still opposes the idea of a summit and feels that redefinitions of the relationship should be worked out primarily through bilateral negotiations between the United States and individual European governments.

France, they added, is also strongly against any idea of tying the questions of security, trade and monetary reform together.

The Brandt government's chief spokesman, Ruediger von Wechmar, cautioned newsman not to place too much stress on these "differences of opinion about nuances and methodology." The main thing, Mr. Wechmar said, is that both Bonn and Paris are agreed on "the importance and necessity of launching a transatlantic dialogue."

truth would come out anyway, the memorandum states, Mr. Dean said "that a Cuban group could possibly be used to transfer the payments." No other mention of a $1-million figure appears in the White House version of the Nixon-Dean meetings.

The memorandum is the latest in a series of leaks this week concerning Mr. Dean's upcoming testimony before the Senate committee.

Some of the leaks are evidently designed to discredit Mr. Dean's testimony; others may be intended to bolster his credibility; still others may have been leaked because of internal political friction within the Watergate committee.

The memorandum begins with a meeting Sept. 15, 1972—the date of the indictment of the seven Watergate conspirators: "Dean reports on [Internal Revenue Service] IRS investigation of Larry [Lawrence F.] O'Brien [then the chairman of the Democratic party]. Dean reported on Watergate indictments."

Mr. O'Brien, reacting to the disclosure that the IRS was conducting an investigation of him, commented: "I have been subjected to intensive scrutiny by the IRS since 1970 upon my return as Democratic national chairman. Up to this point I had no reason to believe that the audits were on anything but the merits, now I'm not sure."

An O'Brien associate said that Mr. O'Brien had to hire a lawyer and accountant to deal with the IRS audit and that the cost to him in fees was about $10,000. The result of the audit was an adjustment upward in Mr. O'Brien's taxes of a few hundred dollars.

In other developments:

● Lawyers for John N. Mitchell said that they had blocked temporarily any attempts by the Senate Watergate committee to take closed-door testimony from the former attorney general.

Plate Cacheris, one of Mr. Mitchell's lawyers, said that investigators for the Senate committee had expressed interest in questioning Mr. Mitchell privately this week.

But Mr. Cacheris said that he had opposed the questioning at least until after the Sen mittee had ruled on Mr. request that he be excu appearing as a witnes televised Watergate hea representatives of the United States, North Vietnam, South Vietnam and the Viet Cong.

The U.S. Embassy said the liaison flight was canceled at the last minute when the senior North Vietnamese delegate, Lt. Col. Huynh Van Trinh, refused to sign a safety certificate guaranteeing that the North Vietnamese were not carrying any dangerous cargo.

The embassy said the United States has informed members of the four-party team that it would no longer provide the aircraft unless all passengers sign a safety certificate similar to one used on most international flights.

The embassy said the precaution was taken to prevent a recurrence of an incident June 8 when an incendiary device concealed in the baggage of a North Vietnamese passenger ignited. Seven persons were injured and the interior of the plane was damaged.

A North Vietnamese spokesman accused the United States of making a pretext to cancel the flight in order to "cause obstacles" to the activities of the team.

Meanwhile, in Cambodia a government position fell and at least two others were surrounded on a 10-mile Communist-occupied stretch of Highway 6, military sources said today.

The northern highway was attacked and closed to all traffic June 17 between 38 and 48 miles from Phnom Penh.

WASHINGTON, June 22 (AP).—The U.S. Navy today declared the main channel of Haiphong Harbor, North Vietnam's principal port, to be open and safe for shipping.

A ship of a Navy minesweeping task force sailed through the channel twice without incident Wednesday.

The declaration is in large part a formality, since ships from Communist countries have been using the harbor regularly with no problems for some months.

Rogers Assures NATO on Accord

WASHINGTON, June 22 (UPI).—Secretary of State William P. Rogers today said U.S. defense obligations to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, including an American nuclear deterrent, are fully preserved in the agreement on prevention of nuclear war signed between the United States and the Soviet Union today.

A State Department official said Mr. Rogers gave the assurance after summoning ambassadors of all NATO member countries to the State Department for a full briefing on the agreement. The envoys also were supplied with complete texts of the agreement, the official said.

The official also said Mr. Rogers told the NATO ambassadors the agreement does not undercut the treaty's importance to the United States.

Nixon Estates Have Cost

GTON, June 23.—The rvices Administration ,883,889 on improving ing President Nixon's perties in Florida and a GSA official said re includes $1,180,522 ng and operating the dte House at Key Bis- $707,367 for improve- San Clemente alone. Clemente figure is gher than the figure ted a week ago as the nt spent there. It does GSA funds spent to improve and operate Western White House facilities on Coast Guard property adjacent to Mr. Nixon's residence.

Arthur F. Sampson, chief of the GSA, said his accountants are now tabulating total Western White House costs. He estimated they will exceed $1 million in improvements and operating costs.

The figures Mr. Sampson released do not include many thousands of dollars spent by the Defense Department and the White House communications agency at the two Nixon residences.

Mr. Sampson said that to his knowledge no GSA funds were spent on the private residences of Mr. Nixon's two predecessors in office—President Lyndon B. Johnson's ranch in Texas and President John F. Kennedy's Hyannisport compound in Massachusetts.

Searched Records

A GSA spokesman who released the figures said: "We recognize there's quite a gap between the new figure for San Clemente and figures we gave you before. But we were giving out information piecemeal before and now we have had a very thorough search of the records."

Mr. Sampson said that all GSA expenditures at both of Mr. Nixon's estates were requested by the Secret Service and authorized under a law that requires federal agencies to provide funds requested for the security of the President.

The figures were broken down as follows for the complex at Key Biscayne: improvements, $579,907; equipment, $46,294; operation and maintenance, $554,321.

In San Francisco, records released by the regional office of the GSA showed the San Clemente expenditures were used for a variety of purposes, including: $57,582 for a security wall; $26,740 for security posts (three gazebos and a gatehouse); $130,530 for exterior electrical work and $53,644 for interior electrical work, both for security and communications systems; $11,561 for a redwood security fence; $20,397 for a gas heating system; $13,186 for a security post (beach cabane) and railroad crossover, and $76,000 to repair and replace landscaping and sprinklers damaged by construction work.

All of these expenditures were made for improvements to the residence from July 1, 1969, to June 30, 1970, and some had been reported previously.

The records also showed a large number of smaller, miscellaneous items, including: $1,950 to prune trees, to "eliminate safety hazard caused by dead branches"; $750 to replant a fallen tree, which "interfered with securit- systems"; $1,853 to furnish and install a flagpole; $539 for fertilizer, and $8,614 for a concrete manhole, to "secure phone system."

The report also lists an expenditure of $42,813 for supervision and design costs for the improvements in 1970 and $16,724 for GSA design and inspection charges on contracts issued in 1971.

Mr. Nixon bought the 26-acre San Clemente property and house in 1969 for $1.4 million.

Missile, in Test Firing, Hits Fuselage

New Navy F-14 Shoots Itself Down

WASHINGTON, June 22 (IHT). —A new Navy F-14 twin-jet fighter was shot down by its own Sparrow missile Wednesday during a test 70 miles off the California coast, the Navy announced yesterday.

"The missile was launched as planned," the Navy said. "However, it appears the missile did not clear the aircraft sufficiently and struck the bottom of the fuselage."

The Navy said it appeared that the plane itself did not malfunction and that test-model F-14 Tomcats are continuing in flight status. The Navy said Sparrow firings from F-14s have been suspended pending determination of the cause of Wednesday's accident.

The two-man crew ejected safely and the plane plunged into the Pacific.

A fire erupted after the Sparrow, an intermediate-range missile designed to shoot down other aircraft, struck the fuselage.

According to the Pentagon, the test called for the plane to drop the missile, but the Sparrow slammed upward into the Tomcat, rupturing a fuel line and causing the fire.

The plane was on loan to the Grumman Aerospace Corp., maker of the 1,500-mile-an-hour Tomcat, for tests at California's Point Mugu. It was flown by two civilian employees of Grumman.

It was the third of these advanced fighter aircraft to be lost since the F-14 first flew in December, 1970.

Purchase Protest

WASHINGTON, June 22 (NYT). —Sen. Stuart Symington, D., Mo., the acting chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee, has charged that the controversial F-14 interceptor had been "shoved down the throats" of the Marine Corps in order to lower the cost of the plane to the Navy.

The charge was denied by Navy Secretary John W. Warner as he appeared before the Senate committee Tuesday to defend the Defense Department's revised plan to buy the increasingly expensive F-14 plane produced by Grumman at Bethpage, N.Y.

Mr. Warner, who came to the hearing flanked by 17 admirals, generals and aides, was unable to provide immediate figures on the new costs of the F-14 or refused to discuss them in open session on grounds that the Navy was still negotiating with Grumman. But from figures supplied by some of his aides to reporters, it appeared that the cost of the F-14 was increasing by about $2.4 million. The average price for each plane would thus go from $16.8 million to $19.2 million.

Under the new plan, worked out by the Defense Department after Grumman refused to produce additional planes under the old contract, the Navy and the Marine Corps will consolidate their aircraft procurement funds to buy 50 F-14s in the coming fiscal year and probably another 50 in the ensuing year.

Fly-Off' Ordered

The Defense Department has ordered a "fly-off competition" between stripped-down versions of the F-14 and the Air Force's F-15 interceptor to determine if a less costly interceptor can be found as a replacement for the F-14 in future orders.

In beginning its consideration of the Pentagon's annual military procurement bill, the House Armed Services Committee Tuesday approved the Defense Department's request for $703 million to procure 50 F-14s in the coming fiscal year plus the "fly-off" that is expected to cost at least $250 million.

At the same time, however, the House committee reportedly made nearly a 50 percent cut in the $802 million that the Air Force had requested to procure 77 additional F-15s from the McDonnel Douglas Corp. in St. Louis.

The Marine Corps, after emphasizing in congressional testimony this spring that it wanted to buy McDonnell Douglas's F-4J fighter to modernize its forces, has switched its position and is willing to buy at least 80 F-14s.

This switch obviously annoyed Sen. Symington, particularly since the F-4J also is produced in Missouri.

Sen. Symington charged that the Marine Corps had been "pressured" by the Navy into buying the F-14 so as to increase the order and thus lower the cost-per-plane of the F-14 to the Navy. In the process, he argued, the Marine Corps was getting a plane designed for air defense of the fleet that was not particularly suited for the Marine Corps requirement of a fighter-bomber that could provide close air support on a beachhead.

New Hampshire's Sen. Cotton, A Republican, to Retire in '74

By Rod Paul

CONCORD, N.H., June 22 (WP).—Norris Cotton, R., N.H., said today he will retire from the Senate when his term ends in 1974. Sen. Cotton, 73, said his wife's poor health was an element in his decision. He has served 28 years in Washington, eight years in the House and 20 years in the Senate. A conservative, Sen. Cotton announced his retirement through the Manchester Union Leader newspaper, long a supporter of the state's senior senator.

Within hours of the announcement, several Republicans either openly indicated their candidacy or were listed as possible contenders for the job.

Democrats regarded as possible candidates for Sen. Cotton's Senate seat include former Minnesota Sen. Eugene McCarthy, who showed up in New Hampshire earlier this month to help raise funds for the Democratic State Committee.

Residency Eyed

Sen. McCarthy said during his visit that he hoped to purchase land and become a resident of New Hampshire.

Democratic leaders regard Sen. Cotton's retirement as a chance to enlarge the party's share in the state's congressional delegation.

Presently, the only Democratic member of the delegation is Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre.

Rep. Louis C. Wyman, R., N.H., confirmed through his office that he "intended to declare candidacy" for Sen. Cotton's seat.

Rep. Wyman's colleague, Rep. James C. Cleveland, R., N.H., said he has made no decision on his own plans. Close friends of Rep. Cleveland indicate he is considering a bid for either the Senate, re-election to the House or for the governorship.

Sen. Cotton has staunchly supported President Nixon's domestic and foreign policies. Only recently has Sen. Cotton broken with Mr. Nixon over the Watergate scandal and on the issue of resumed bombing in Southeast Asia.

House Passes Restricted Bill Providing Lawyers for Poor

WASHINGTON, June 22 (WP). —The House last night passed a bill to set up a corporation to provide legal services for the poor but only after crippling it with more than two dozen amendments restricting what the legal services attorneys could do. The final vote was 276 to 95.

The bill was maimed after a White House committee compromise collapsed when the White House staff divided over the issue. White House Counsel Leonard Garment and Under Secretary Frank Carlucci of the Health Education and Welfare Department had generally agreed to committee changes in the administration bill. But Howard Phillips, demoted by court order from his job as acting director of the Office of Economic Opportunity, and White House director of congressional relations William Timmons refused to accept anything but the original White House bill.

'Back-Up Centers'

The final product not only incorporated the administration's provisions to prevent legal services attorneys from lobbying and from engaging in political activity but opened the floodgates to amendments preventing the attorneys from bringing busing, school desegregration or abortion suits, or providing assistance for minors under 18 except in child abuse cases or other very limited instances.

In addition, an amendment by Rep. Edith Greene, D., Ore., effectively knocked out the "back-up centers" for research and technical assistance for legal services attorneys set up in law schools around the country.

In other congressional developments:

● The House Rules Committee cleared for House action next week a bill limiting the power of the President to wage undeclared war, as in Indochina.

● The House Foreign Affairs Committee voted unanimously to scrap the 10-year-old Alliance for Progress program to concentrate U.S. aid on such specific needs as food production and health.

Rep. Donald M. Fraser, D., Minn., who made the motion to cut the Alliance program out of foreign aid, said U.S. funds to Latin America would not be reduced. Administrators would have greater flexibility to put aid where it is needed most, he said.

● The House Appropriations Committee yesterday voted to restore most of the cuts in health and education programs proposed by President Nixon, boosting his budget by $1.2 billion.

"The committee could not possibly accept the meat-ax approach which was proposed in the budget," the committee said.

A Return to 'Dark Ages'

Court's Obscenity Ruling Deplored

WASHINGTON, June 22 (WP). —Predictions of what could happen to America's books, movies and magazines as a result of the Supreme Court decision on obscenity ranged from "no effect" to "chaos" yesterday.

Some spokesmen for the publishing and motion-picture industries predicted a reactionary return to the "dark ages" of prohibition (with sexual matter widely banned instead of alcohol) as a result of the court's 5-4 decision yesterday returning the major responsibility for defining obscene material to individual states and municipalities.

The decision could give state and local law enforcement agencies more leeway in prosecuting allegedly obscene material. A work need no longer be found "utterly without redeeming social values," a 1957 guideline of the court, but would only have to be shown to lack "serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value" to be judged obscene.

According to the decision, a book or movie could be found not obscene in one city, while being banned in another. The court ruled that "community standards" used to determine obscenity will be those of the local, not the national, community.

Impact on Movies

Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, which represents the major film companies, said last night that the ruling would have "no effect" on the "responsible" motion-picture industry.

"Of course, the real problem is this: What happens if you send what you think is a serious work of art into the marketplace and the local law enforcement officials harass it?

"You may win in court, but then you may have to spend so much money that you've doomed your picture to economic disaster. And a jury may say, 'You think that's serious but we think that's obscene.' We're going to have to examine this very carefully." Mr. Valenti said.

It is the "community standards" aspect of the decision that will most affect film-makers, according to producer-director Stanley Kramer, now in Houston to promote his new film, "Oklahoma Crude."

Mr. Kramer said the decision could be "chaotic" for movie companies, which might be forced to prepare many different versions of films to comply with varying local standards. "On the surface, this has very tragic overtones," he said.

Mr. Kramer also said he thought the decision was unnecessary as a curb on pornography. "The cultural upheaval is now beginning to right itself and porno is receding on its own; people are getting tired of it."

Doom for Hard-Core

Makers of porno films predicted doom for themselves. "The hard-core industry is going to dry up," said Dave Friedman, president of the Adult Film Association of America, an organization of the makers of so-called X-rated films. "The court ruling is a lot more far-reaching than any of us expected."

But Stanley Fleischman, a California lawyer who has defended numerous free-speech cases, foresaw less drastic effects. "There will initially be a lot of cases on these things," he said. "But now the American people accept them [sexual films]. So we're going to take these cases to juries and win. Eventually, local legislation will be passed that will limit the amount of prosecution that's done."

Producer-director Otto Preminger said from his New York office that obscenity will be "worse than ever" under the ruling. "It will open the doors to real porno —but in secret. It will be like Prohibition. We'll have speakeasies where people can get porno. The quick-buck people who make porno will not give up and the more you forbid it, the worse it will be."

Spokesmen for the book industry said the decision would lead to, at the least, complications over what can and cannot be printed and sold.

"It makes the job of a book seller much more difficult," said G. Royce Smith, executive director of the American Booksellers Association, the industry's largest trade organization. "The definition of what is legally obscene is now on more of an emotional than a legal basis."

Police Delighted

NEW YORK, June 22 (AP).— Prosecutors and police officials are delighted by the Supreme Court's ruling on obscenity and many say it is just what they needed to crack the whip on dirty books and movies.

"If I operated one of those stores, I'd close like two minutes ago," Florida Assistant Attorney General Ray Marky said. "I think they are out of business."

Similar sentiments were voiced by law enforcement officials across the nation. Many officials felt the court had finally clarified the language of the law and they cited the difficulty and expense in the past of applying national standards of decency to local cases.

"I expect that in the immediate future, local communities can determine for themselves what will and what will not be tolerated in the nature of explicit sexual material," said Larry Salmon, Floyd County district attorney and chairman of the Criminal Law Section of the State Bar of Georgia.

Arkansas Attorney General Jim Guy Tucker concurred.

"What correlation is there between a block in the center of New York City and Bald Knob, Ark?" he asked.

"The greatest thing in the world," was the way Columbus, Ohio, prosecutor Daniel Johnson described the ruling. "The average juror . . . has a good understanding of what this community would tolerate and the limits placed on this standard."

U.K. Woman Is Fifth To Sail Atlantic Alone

NEWPORT, R. I., June 22 (UPI).—A British business executive who said she left her job "for the simple life" completed a 37-day transatlantic solo voyage in a 32-foot sailboat here yesterday.

Clare Francis, 27, of Esher, Surrey, set out aboard the Gulliver G May 15 from Falmouth. She was a marketing executive for a fruit dealer, the fifth woman to sail the Atlantic alone.

U.S. Court Voids Russian's 1964 Conviction as Spy

PHILADELPHIA, June 22 (UPI).—The 1964 espionage conviction and 20-year sentence of a Russian on spy charges involving a Strategic Air Command communication system were reversed yesterday by a federal appeals court.

The Third U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals reversed the conviction of Igor Ivanov, 42, who has since been allowed to return to Russia, saying that a district court improperly allowed the use of certain wiretap evidence.

Mr. Ivanov, a former chauffeur for a Soviet trade agency in the United States, was convicted along with John W. Butenko, of Orange, N.J., in U.S. District Court in Newark, N.J.

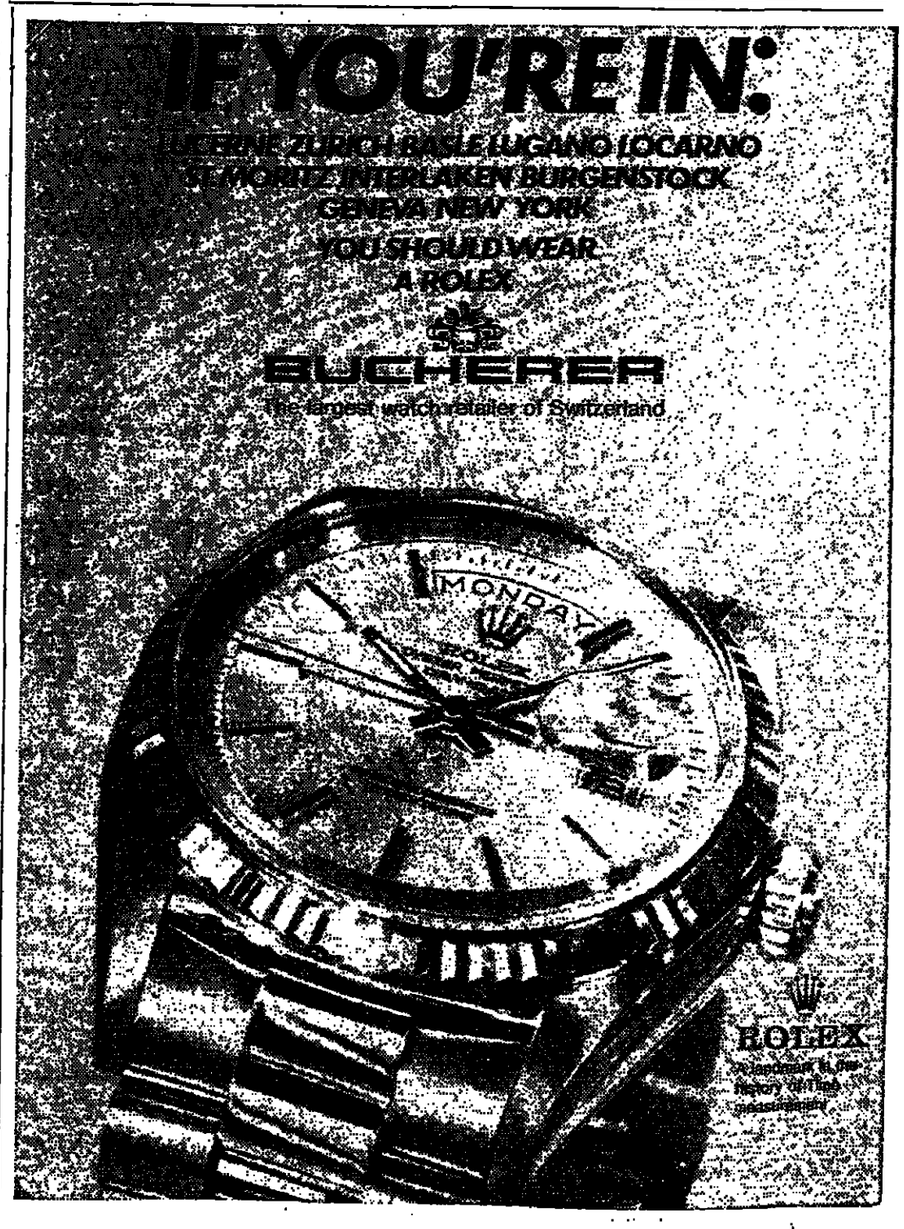

SAC is the U.S. Air Force's fleet of long-range bombers and missiles, which are the first line of retaliation in case of enemy attack.

Mr. Ivanov was allowed to return to Russia after the trial when Ambasssador Anatoly F. Dobrynin assured the court the defendant would return here if his appeal failed.

An appeal by Butenko was denied last month by U.S. District Court. Butenko said there were not enough women on the grand jury that indicted him.

Frank Leahy, 65, Skippered Notre Dame From 1941 to '53

From Wire Dispatches

PORTLAND, Ore., June 22.—Frank Leahy, 65, who coached the Notre Dame football team to seven undefeated seasons, died yesterday after a long illness.

He had been suffering from several ailments, including spinal arthritis, diabetes and a heart condition, infected bladder and preleukemic blood condition. Death was tentatively listed as congestive heart failure.

Mr. Leahy coached the Fighting Irish from 1941 to 1953. His clubs captured four national championships.

Mr. Leahy played under Knute Rockne at Notre Dame on the 1929 national championship team. He later became an assistant coach under Rockne and accepted the head coaching job there in 1941.

Served in Navy

A native of Winner, S.D., Mr. Leahy spent two years in the Navy during World War II and came back to Notre Dame in 1946.

Mr. Leahy, who called his team members "lads," ran up an 87-11-9 record while at South Bend, Ind. Before taking over the helm at Notre Dame, he coached Boston College and his record there was 20-2.

He had been an assistant coach at Georgetown University and then Michigan State before going to Fordham, where he helped build the line that became known as the "Seven Blocks of Granite."

He remained as Notre Dame's head coach until January, 1954, when he resigned. He said he was acting on the advice of physicians who had based their findings on his state of health then as well as on a severe pancreatic attack he had suffered during a game the previous year.

He returned to the sporting world in 1960 as general manager of the American Football League's Los Angeles Chargers before that team moved to San Diego. However, he held that job only one year before going into the insurance business in Portland.

KRONACH, West Germany, June 22 (AP).—An East German border soldier was killed early today when he stepped on a mine as he attempted to flee to the West.

Tension Eased in Yugoslavia After Tito Aides' Downfall

By Raymond H. Anderson

BELGRADE, June 22 (NYT).—Shortly after the removal of a shadowy security official, Col. Gen. Ivan Miskovic, from President Tito's regime, rumors circulated in Belgrade tonight that another powerful general, Ivan Dolnicar, also had been ousted.

There was no official announcement nor confirmation in either case, but reports on the ousters circulating among diplomats were considered authoritative.

The removals appeared to be linked to a sharp turn in Yugoslav policy following a winter of political tension and uncertainty.

Yugoslavs and Westerners, especially Americans, have perceived a lessening of suspicion and wariness since April, about the time that Gen. Miskovic was removed as President Tito's personal adviser on security affairs and assigned as a counselor in the presidency.

The presidency is a 23-member body set up for rotation of the post of chief of state after President Tito steps down. At present, it plays a minor role.

Gen. Miskovic has been ousted from that position as well, it is reliably reported here. Officially, it is said that he is "ill," but privately it is confirmed that his illness is political.

Gen. Dolnicar, a Slovene, has been secretary of the Presidency's Defense Council, head of the army's Communist party organization and an assistant to the secretary of defense, Gen. Nikola Ljubicic. He also is a member of the Communist party's 52-member Presidium.

Both Gen. Miskovic and Gen. Dolnicar fought in the ranks of Marshal Tito's partisan forces during World War II.

Gen. Miskovic has been in intelligence and security since the end of the war. His basic outlook, as expressed in occasional published interviews, was that Yugoslavia was a target of ceaseless foreign espionage, intrigue and subversive activity.

The exact reasons for his removal from power have not yet been confirmed. But the indications are that he gained too much influence on the 81-year-old President Tito, irritated other officials in the process and paid with his job when a harsh "vigilance" campaign backfired.

The vigilance propaganda was linked to a drive ordered by President Tito last fall to reassert the authority and ideological discipline of the country's Communist party, weakened after two decades of reform.

As part of a widespread clamor in the press against "bourgeois influences," the military journal, Front, began a series of articles about alleged threats to Yugoslavia.

For several months, it had seemed as if a faction in Yugoslavia was striving deliberately to provoke rancor between Washington and Belgrade.

But by early May, the mood was changing. The change was signaled April 23 in a long speech by President Tito to the newly created Assembly of the Federation.

Frank "Three Fingers" Coppola, surrounded by Italian police, when he was being arrested in Rome in 1971.

U.S. Ex-Mafioso Seized in Rome

ROME, June 22 (UPI).—Police today arrested Frank (Three Fingers) Coppola, onetime reputed Mafia boss of Kansas City, on charges of engineering an assassination attempt against a high police official. The United States deported him in 1948.

A police spokesman said an arrest warrant named Coppola as the alleged instigator of an assassination attempt against Angelo Mangano, a police official in charge of investigating the Mafia.

A gunman ambushed Mr. Mangano outside his Rome home April 5, fired several shots at him, and escaped. Mr. Mangano, 53, was hit by five bullets in the head, chest and arms but survived.

In Milan, agents also arrested Ugo Bossi and Sergio Boffi, both 35, as alleged gunmen hired by Coppola to kill Mr. Mangano.

rugged purple mountains has been relatively peaceful since the 1967 war and the Israeli occupation.

The centerpiece of the five-day celebration was the reception that Sheikh Abu Abdullah gave for the principal sheikhs of the region and for his Israeli friends. It was a sort of Woodstock-in-the-desert and it illustrated what a polyglot place the southern Sinai has become in six years.

The 300 or more guests, about half of them Israelis, assembled in the late afternoon as the scorching sun was beginning to set behind the mountains on the Egyptian side of the gulf. After the welcoming cups of bitter coffee, all settled down on rugs spread on the sand outside the mud-walled home of the bride.

The ranking Israeli guest was Maj. Gen. Shlomo Gazit, the administrator of the occupied territories, who had come from Tel Aviv to represent Israel. He and the other Israeli officers slipped off their combat boots and sat cross-legged on the carpets.

Four young women relatives of the bride had come from their homes in Egypt, across the gulf. Their invitation to the wedding of the sheikh of sheikhs won quick Egyptian approval for them to cross the gulf aboard the small launch that makes the trip twice a month.

The sheikh of sheikhs, a dignified, dark-skinned man with a neat mustace and horn-rimmed glasses, was born in the Sinai and served with the British Army in Egypt. He was selected as first-among-equals in the Sinai largely because of his ability to read and write Arabic—a rarity among the Bedouin sheikhs. His scepter is the ball-point pen that he wears in his robes.

Although a Moslem, Sheikh Abu Abdullah enjoys much of the good life proscribed by the Koran. His capacity for Scotch is legendary. He reputedly can down a fifth in less than an hour and still be deadly accurate with the automatic pistol he carries at all times.

Missing from the celebrations, in accordance with Bedouin custom, was the bride, Miss Mussa. She and the other Arab women were kept veiled and secluded inside her family's home.

Traditional Windup

She emerged only once, concealed head-to-toe in white satin and veils, to join in an automobile-age version of the "fantasia" that is the traditional windup of Bedouin weddings.

In the days of Lawrence of Arabia tribesmen on camels and horses whirled in a big circle at full gallop, firing their rifles into the air. This day, the ritual was carried out by a convoy of pickup trucks. Horns blaring, they spun around the oasis three times, to the cheers of the guests, with Miss Mussa in the cab of the first truck.

When it was over, she was led, still veiled, from the home of her parents to the nearby wooden hut built by Sheikh Abu Abdullah for the occasion. Once inside, she became the newest and youngest first lady of the Sinai Bedouin.

Boredom and the Chrysler Coventry Strike

One worker had been drilling holes in flywheels, 74 an hour for eight hours a day, for 10 years.

NTRY, England, June 22 s).—A strike at a Chrysler n the outskirts of Coventry, l of the year there, has attention on the prob- f boredom and frustra- ong assembly-line workers ar industry.

industry has one of the rike records in Britain and- tion is being asked: Why ly paid workers, earning) and £60 a week, so ready off the job?

heory gaining increasing is that the pressures and y of working as virtual a fast-moving assembly ide workers with the ex- put down their tools and perficial reason for the walkout at Chrysler's Ryton plant, which produces the best-selling Avenger cars, is the loss of 1 1/2 hours pay by 500 body shop workers. The company had halted the assembly line for that period on May 24 because of what it calls shoddy workmanship.

The workers say they were supplied with defective materials by the company, which wanted to keep the line moving at all costs. A Chrysler official here says an investigation showed the parts were "of normal standard."

Although Chrysler said yesterday it would stop all car and truck production at its five British factories next week because of the disrupted engine production at Ryton, negotiators announced a surprise agreement tonight. Details of the accord, which will be submitted to workers tomorrow, were not revealed.

A former managing director of the Ryton plant, George Cattell, gave a hint of the workers' point of view in a recent letter to the Times of London.

Describing his time with Chrysler, he said: "Men were engaged on repetitive operations with a 1.6-minute cycle for eight hours a day, five days a week, with little interest in what they were doing and little prospect of change.

"I know from experience that the very monotony gave rise to unreasonable and uncooperative attitudes."

An employee of another car firm, British Leyland, is on his way to becoming something of a folk hero in Britain over a recent gesture of protest he made against his job.

Trevor Jones was put on 12 months' probation by a court after throwing a chunk of metal into a machine worth £300,000.

Mr. Jones had been drilling holes in flywheels, 74 an hour for eight hours a day, for 10 years.

"Try to imagine," he said following his court hearing, "doing that job, day in, day out, for 10 years. I began to find the working conditions terrible. Most of all it was the boredom."

Mr. Cattell also wrote in the Times of London: "I believe that the time has come to think again about the American system of management technique, which attempts to squeeze every last second out of every working hour.

"This is an intensive farming system to men on the production line. Breeding boredom and frustration and monotony in turn breeds petty-mindedness. Bloody-mindedness in turn breeds strikes."

William Price, the Labor member of Parliament for Rugby, an area which includes the Ryton plant, firmly believes automation and monotony are major factors in strikes in the car industry.

'Soul-Destroying Job'

"I doubt if there is a more soul-destroying job in British industry than working on the assembly line," he says. "It doesn't surprise me that the men look forward to a bit of industrial strife just for a few hours off."

Why then do people enter the industry and work on assembly lines?

"Money, big money," Mr. Price said. "You even get skilled engineers seduced by the money."

Officials of the big four in the British car industry, Chrysler, Ford, General Motors's Vauxhall and British Leyland, acknowledge the problems of assembly line production, but they give no indication that any solution is in sight.

"There are problems of boredom and monotony on the assembly line," a Chrysler official said. "We recognise this as a problem, but not a problem that should lead to this sort of situation in British industry."

A Ford spokesman showed rather more sympathy.

The production-line technique is the most economic method of producing cars, he said, "and when you are in competition you just cannot afford to put yourself at an economic disadvantage."

'Job Enrichment'

But he added: "It is arguable that we are reaching the breaking point. If we go for job enrichment, we might lose on production but gain on attendance."

The Swedish auto company Volvo is experimenting with a plan to get away from the assembly line procedure, with each man doing more varied work on a car, but the Ford official said that "Volvo is being organized so that if necessary it could be returned to the conventional production line technique."

Mr. Price said that one way in which the Americans tried to overcome monotony on the assembly line was to give employees a wider range of work.

He said that in the United States, "I have been told many times that the British worker is not lazy but is resistant to change."

A Crocodile Warning In the Po

ROVIGO, Italy, June 22 (UPI).—The Po, Italy's longest river and rich with history and myth, had something new in it today—a 40-day-old crocodile.

Police said the crocodile, named Jao, escaped from a circus on the banks of the Po and vanished into the river. They said it is only 20 inches long now but can grow to 20 feet and pose a danger to swimmers.

Police, circus hands and volunteers were searching the Po delta for Jao.

French Police Demand Action Against Leftists After Rioting

PARIS, June 22 (AP).—French police unions today called for tough government action against leftists who injured 76 policemen, two critically, in a Molotov-cocktail battle in city streets last night.

Police headquarters said about 1,000 leftist "shock troops," wearing crash helmets, carrying iron bars and supplied with fire bombs by a truck service, were involved in the worst fighting the capital has seen since the 1968 student riots.

The rioting affected an area a few blocks square on the Left Bank and the immediate Bastille area, with running scuffles in some other locations. All these areas were calm today.

Most of the central city area, with a permanent population of about 2.5 million, was untouched by the rioting.

Officials said the leftists were "perfectly trained in street fighting." They battled police who were guarding a meeting called by an extreme rightist group protesting immigration of North and black Africans into France.

The two major trade unions organizing the various French police forces—local police, gendarmes and special riot squads—protested that the leftist commandos had not been broken up by the government.

"We demand exemplary firmness, the immediate arrest of all the armed and helmeted commandos and the dissolution of the anarchist miniparties whose activity and objectives are to injure the nation's institutions," the National Independent Police Union said.

Police in the early hours of today, after the rioting had ended, raided the headquarters of both the Trotskyite Communist League and the rightist New Order movements.

Weapons Seized

Police said they seized two army-style rifles, a hand grenade, Molotov cocktails and quantities of clubs and pick handles at the Communist League headquarters.

They detained 25 persons, including a member of the league's politburo, for lengthy questioning. No arrests were reported at the headquarters of the rightist group.

Doctors fought to save the lives of two officers of the tough CRS (Republican Security Company) squads. Each man suffered severe burns from firebombs in the street fighting, police sources said.

THE ART MARKET

When Art Objects Are 'Too' Rare

By Souren Melikian

PARIS, June 22 (IHT).—Celtic art so rarely appears on the market that when it does one would expect it to elicit intense competition and command very high prices.

Such was not the case Wednesday at the Hôtel Drouot in Paris at the Ader-Tajan-Picard sale of "Objets de Haute Curiosité"—an odd description meaning works that are of high quality, unusual type and fairly old (usually no later than the 17th century). If nothing else, the sale proved that not even inflation can boost prices ofworks that are "too" rare.

The first Celtic work was a headless statue of a man sitting cross-legged and pressing a large torque against his chest. Like much of Celtic art, this figure is somewhat mysterious. It was found not far from the Château d'Aigueperse in central France around 1880. Seventy years later, it was described by a French scholar, Franck Delage, in one of his publications—he called it "the squatting god of Aigueperse." Two other Celtic figures holding torques in the same way and seven more with torques around their necks are known to exist. But the basis for identifying them as gods is slight. This, however, does not have any bearing on prices.

The powerful, almost primeval style of carving—this work antedates Roman occupation of Gaul—is further emphasized by the grainy feel of the hard, gray serpentine. At 25,800 francs, the Aigueperse statue may be regarded as one of the year's best bargains.

Paradox

Even so, the price exceeded expert Charles Ratton's estimate by 50 percent. While it may seem paradoxical, the estimate for a work of museum quality had, of necessity, to be low because for works of such rarity no market exists—there are no collectors, in the ordinary sense of the word. Admittedly Celtic bronzes are to be seen in museums (such as the outstanding Musée de Saint-Germain-en-Laye), but few people are familiar with the carvings. And when tastes are not carefully cultivated appetites fade.

On the face of it, it seems puzzling that one of the French museums did not pre-empt the statue. But the 10 million francs paid last year for a Claude Lorraine presumably put such a dent in public funds for art that when something like this statue comes along there is no money to pay for it.

The other Celtic carving, a 68-centimeter-high statue of a standing man, stroking his chin, fared even worse. Said to represent the god Attis, the statue shows strong Roman influence in both attitude and dress. Among art objects at the Château de Bach, near Tulle in central France, until the turn of the century, it has long been a subject for discussion among scholars. Salomon Reinach wrote about it in his "Repertory of Greek and Roman Statues." But all this left dealers unimpressed and 8,680 francs was the final bid, nearly 10 times under the highest price paid at the same sale for late medieval sculpture. This latter category made fantastic prices. And the best pieces were not, on the whole, the most expensive ones.

Sculpture started with a couple of alabaster reliefs from Nottingham—a great deal of English medieval statuary found its way to France from England during the 16th century when Henry VIII was reforming the church and squelching monastic life.

Both reliefs were of a fairly poor quality. One (40 by 35 centimeters) showed the assumption of Mary and made 19,500 francs; the other (47 by 28 centimeters), of Jesus riding into Jerusalem, rose to 20,180 francs, a huge price certainly not justified by intrinsic beauty.

A rather boring standing figure of Jesus, carved in the 15th century, fetched 11,400 francs, mainly because it was German and the market for German medieval art is booming in Germany itself.

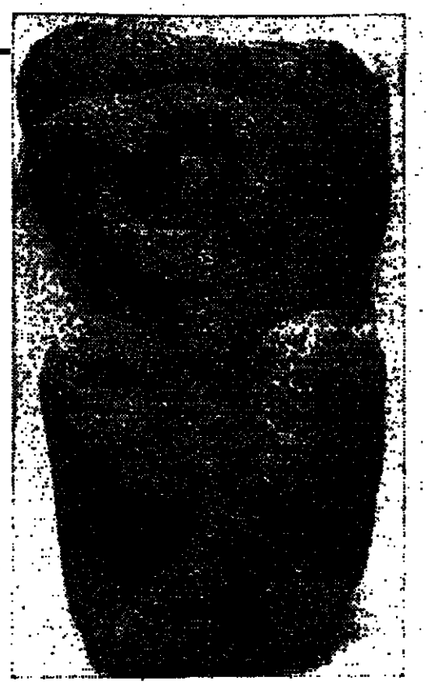

The real masterpiece in the sale, in my opinion, was strangely underpriced. This was a late 15th-century polychrome wood relief (64 by 32 centimeters) of Mary on her deathbed. Again, it was a German work. The high quality of the carving made it almost cheap at 33,500 francs.

A few minutes later, an important group (104 by 90 centimeters), also in polychrome wood, came up on the block. This showed Mary holding the dead Jesus, with St. John and Mary Magdalene at her side and other figures, dressed in 16th-century costumes, in the background. The expert apparently had doubts about provenance for no country of origin was given in the catalogue. However, Edouard Bresset, a French dealer specializing in medieval art, felt no qualms, for he paid 79,700 francs for it—about the right price for a piece of this size and importance.

In the context of the prices for the medieval works, the Celtic sculpture seems even cheaper for, clearly, there were buyers at the sale with money to spend. But even the best of auctions cannot reverse some trends, that concerning Persian art, for instance. As usual, it sold badly. Some very good pieces commanded low prices and at least one very bad piece went for a huge sum.

Among the good pieces were a fine Luristan ax decorated with animal heads (2,900 francs) and a still better bracelet, decorated with human faces (2,190 francs), both selling for about a fifth of what they might have fetched at a really posh sale last year.

In contrast, a 12th-century-style incense burner that was an obvious fake—and was considered as such by the expert, who gave it no period in the catalogue (a salesroom convention for saying an object is not genuine)—rose to 1,370 francs. The buyer will eventually discover his mistake, as did the previous owner, whom I saw buying the same incense burner a few weeks ago at Christie's in London at an even higher price. It is this sort of thing which has killed the market and will, so to speak, keep on killing it.

The "god of Aigueperse." Celtic statue which sold for 25,800 francs.

LONDON THEATER

A Trivial 'Signs of the Times

By John Walker

LONDON, June 22 (IHT).—That sporadic bafflement I feel at the ways of the commercial theater welled up at the Vaudeville this week during the dreary stretches of Jeremy Kingston's "Signs of the Times." It was not merely the question of how such a bad play found an astute producer, John Gale, and attracted a star actor, Kenneth More, but why either should expect an audience to come to the show and, having come, should expect them to stay or ever return to any theater again.

My bewilderment extends to the author, for Mr. Kingston's theater criticism has for nine years been one of the brighter spots in the weekly magazine Punch. Yet he is also the author of a novel so sickly in its coy whimsy that, six years ago, it led me to abandon book reviewing. At the Vaudeville, too, Mr. Kingston again encouraged me to forget my profession so that, taking my cue from Mr. More's curtain line: "This is plain bloody ridiculous," I fled the theater at the end of the first act.

I don't mind so much that "Signs of the Times" is a silly, pointless comedy as that it is bad of its kind. It is not so much that the play lacks reality and bears no resemblance to actual life as that its characters have no coherence, no identities of their own, but are mere contrivances to be manipulated into situations intended to provoke laughter. It has a story that buckles when you cast a cold eye at its seams, and attempted wisecracks that shrivel the nerves.

Acting

Had the acting been better, the play might have been endurable. But most of the cast fail to bring any personality to their task and Sandra Duncan, as the love of Mr. More's life, is decidedly dull. Mr. More himself, seemingly feeling that it is enough for him to appear, ambles through his part. Dennis Ramsden offers his colleagues a good few lessons in comedy acting and his flustered style almost had me smiling a couple of times.

Mr. More is intended to represent a journalist on the London Times who becomes that newspaper's first astrologist and uses the opportunity to sort out the two girls in his life, who are both conveniently star-crazy. A play dealing in such artifice either needs the elaborate machinery of farce or a high wit to make it work.

Mr. Kingston tries for the latter, his dialogue is pitiful in its attempt at wit ("If I eat too few oranges, I get spots; too many and I get acidity. I tread a narrow path between the pimple and the burp"), and strains embarrassingly after innuendo ("They broke windows together"—"Broke what together?")

"Signs of the Times" deserves more obloquy than I feel like flinging at it. I want to forget I ever saw part of it. But the play is, in its way, important. I'm sure I will be accused of overreacting, of breaking a flea on the wheel. But the point is not that another West End theater should be overtaken by trivia, but that it should be occupied by such third-rate trumpery; not merely small beer, but also flat and stale and, let us hope, unprofitable.

PARIS THEATER: A Guide to Summertime Entertainme

By Thomas Quinn Curtiss

PARIS, June 23 (IHT).—The Parisian season is running late this year. More than the usual number of theaters are remaining open until mid-July and several hits will not go on vacations at all.

The season's outstanding hit is "La Cage aux Folles" (at the Palais-Royal) in which Jean Poiret (the author) and Michel Serrault, a famed team of the chansonniers, run riot as female impersonators at a transvestite cabaret on the Riviera. Their determination to pose as solid citizens when the son of the first becomes engaged to the daughter of a leftist politician comprises what plot there is. But it is the ever-green joke of a man dressed as a woman, the joke of college shows and "Charley's Aunt," that provides the lion's share of the hilarity. This harum-scarum farce is in the unfailing tradition of the Palais-Royal, cradle of the French bedroom scampers.

"Le Tournant" (at the Théâtre de la Madeleine), like "La Cage aux Folles," has been purchased for Broadway. Jean Piat, long of the Comédie-Française, is its star, playing an established dramatist whose wife betrays him with an aggressive, avant-garde author. Françoise Dorin, who has written many comedy hits, is young enough to know better and should have added a touch of novelty by making the older playwright a hippie and his junior a stuffy conservative. In any case, the light-hearted conflict pleases the public.

"Grand Standing" (at the Saint-Georges) is Neil Simon's "Prisoner of Second Avenue" translated. The Manhattan background has been retained and much of the humor revolves about the ills of that sick city: robberies, muggings, street violence and the economic insecurity that harasses a middle-class couple. The French production is notable for the winning performances of Micheline Luccioni as the courageous wife and of Pierre Mondy as her depressed mate.

Anouilh

"Le Directeur de l'Opera" (at the Comédie des Champs-Elysées) is Jean Anouilh's latest, an ironic study of a Italian impresario more interested in his professional affairs than he is in his annoying and complicated home life. Anouilhesque in theme, tone and treatment, it is illuminated by the performances of Paul Meurisse as the opera director, Jean Parédès as his comic assistant, Madeleine Barbulée as one of his crosses and b Haudepin as his defiant

In this exhibition arranged by the Center of Extra-mural Studies, in conjunction with the American-directed Rita Maram Gallery, the tapestries, more sculptural than decorative, are by a young Scot, Alex Ward, who studied at Dundee, at the Royal College of Art in London, in Oslo and in Warsaw. The etchings are by the Australian master-printmaker Charles Lloyd.

Truus Wilmink, Joost Baljeu, Lucy Milton Gallery, 125 Notting Hill Gate, London, W11, to July 5.

The work of this Dutch husband and wife team is constructivist, formal and pure. Truus Wilmink contributes a series of screen prints and some very formal geometrical pieces in plastic. Joost Baljeu's work includes a maquette for a large piece celebrating the Common Market, and some large monochrome pieces in which the changes of light, when two or three transparent pieces of colored plastic are superimposed, are exploited to the full.

Orensanz, Yucca Lawn, Holland Park, London, W8, to July 14.

Spaniard Angel Orensanz has persuaded the Greater London Council to give him a free hand with a large lawn and the surrounding woodland in the most agreeable of London's parks (formerly the grounds of Holland House). Here he has created a complete environment of more than a hundred sculptures, among which people can walk, children can play, and the park's famous peacocks display. It is an enchanting and imaginative concept, on the parts of both council and sculptor.

Emilio Greco, Roland Browse & Delbanco, 19 Cork St., London, W1, to July 14.

To my taste, Greco's large female nudes in bronze are a trifle too sweet; but his portrait busts have a Renaissance magnificence, similar to that of his doors for Orvieto Cathedral; and his drawings and etchings are superb.

Paris

Escher, Institut Néerlandais, 121 Rue de Lille, Paris 7, to July 8.

Maurits Cornelis Escher died last year at the age of 74. He was an engraver and an artist strangely and intensely involved in patterns, illusions and tricks of perspective and their metaphoric value. His mathematical and scientific bent is obvious and his work has been discussed in some of the foremost scientific publications of Europe and America. A hundred engravings and drawings are displayed here and show a constant flow of inventiveness, paradox, irony and humor: a landscape where the pattern of the fields gradually takes the shape of two interlocking flocks of birds in flight; the inside of a house where people appear to be sitting on the walls as well as the floor, walking up and down steps and out into landscapes set at right angles to one another; water flowing along a mill race and falling back down in a closed circuit on its point of departure. Much of his work is familiar for having been used to illustrate scientific theories both in technical publications and popular works.

André Kertész, Galerie Delpire, 13 Rue de l'Abbaye, Paris 6, to July 13.

This show is devoted to André Kertész's 60 years of activity as a photographer in various parts of the world. Kertész belongs to that extraordinary company of great photographers of our century, but he ranks as something of a pioneer, the earliest pictures dating back to 1912. His photographs are the glance of a quickly observant and sympathetic eye and he can sometimes call to mind a Cartier-Bresson with an easier pace and a slower shutter.

Mason, Galerie Claude Bernard, 5-7 Rue des Beaux-Arts, Paris 6, to July 20.

Raymond Mason is a very gifted English artist living in Paris, and this exhibition of watercolors includes both handsome studies of isolated objects, carefully done, and spacious landscapes and a traveler's notes. His scenes of Marrakesh call to mind the 19th-century English artists who traveled to the Near East (and farther) and brought back portfolios faithfully documenting life in those regions. Mason has a comic gift that comes out best in the plaster relief that is also displayed here and that depicts a New York street scene viewed from inside a shop window, bums, cops, hippies and squares are amusingly depicted.

Ado, Galerie Arnaud, 212 Boulevard Saint-Germain, Paris 7, to July 7.

Ado's hard-edge work is able and elegant and stands in the uncertain zone where design rubs shoulders with art.

Matta, Galerie Creuzevault, 9 Avenue Matignon, Paris 8, and Galerie Iolas, 196 Boulevard Saint-Germain, Paris 7, to July 12.

Matta really knows how to paint, and he gets better at it all the time. His theme however remains rather repetitious: fugitives from the island of Dr. Moreau copulating in a skylab.

Judit Reigl, Galerie Rencontres, 46 Rue Berger, Paris 1, to June 25.

Hungarian-born Judit Reigl has lived in Paris since 1950. The present show includes two types of works: large bed sheets painted on with acrylic and gouache, all representing a monumental human body in an invariable leaning or reclining position, and a series of canvases titled "Guano" which lay on the floor of the artist's studio for several years, accumulating all the paint that fell there while she worked. Ultimately she painted them white and then scraped them to achieve the present result, which is rather handsome.

Entertainment in New York

NEW YORK, June 22 (IHT)—This is how critics rate new films in New York:

"Funeral Parade of Roses," the 1969 film written and directed by Toshio Matsumoto, has as its hero Eddie, a transvestite. "The plot," writes Vincent Canby in The New York Times, "is messier than the plots of a half-dozen Bette Davis films." He keeps having these visions. Well, they aren't truly visions. They're more like flashbacks. As a child, Eddie murdered his mother and her lover with a carving knife . . . The one stable factor in Eddie's life is Gonda (his lover and the manager of a Tokyo club), but when you read in the ads that the film is a 'modern working of the Oedipus myth,' you are given a major clue as to who Gonda actually is. When Eddie finds out, it's back to the old carving knife." Canby calls it a "mopey soap opera made by someone who has seen too many better movies."

The Chinese Film Festival features three documentaries, all made during the last year, says Roger Greenspun of The New York Times, and they are "obviously for foreign consumption. Each has an English-language narration . . . and each has a fairly obvious didactic purpose. "2100 Year Old Tomb Excavated" is an account of the Han Dynasty tomb discovered two years ago and "Historical Relics Unearthed During the Great Proletarian Revolution" is also largely concerned with tomb finds. Both are "immensely appreciative of their splendors and, at the same time, suspicious of them. No glory," writes Greenspun, "of the ancient past is without its revolutionary lesson." The third film, "Acupuncturel Anesthesia," shows acupuncture as part of a "traditional cooperative people's medicine in victorious combat with general anesthesia, the revisionist medicine of certain scornful big-city doctors." But Greenespun finds the film's demonstrations "very convincing."

"Jonathan," directed by Hans W. Geisendorfer (in German with English subtitles), is a vampire movie and an "anti-Fascist" one at that; according to Timesman A. H. Weiler. But none of the anti-Fascist doings "get so seriously into 'Jonathan' as to spoil the fun . . . The cast is huge (there is a veritable plague of vampires . . .) the settings are unusual and very sumptuous." While "Jonathan" doesn't make movie history, it "substantially adds to one of the oddest and grandest traditions of recent popular art."

"Coffy," written and directed by Jack Hill, has as its sexy black heroine Pam Grier. "Despite a good deal of lip service against the evils of drugs and the like," says Timesman A. H. Weiler, "there's a maximum of footage devoted to exposing Miss Grier." A nurse who does very little nursing, she has her problems—her kid sister is on drugs, then there's that bigtime white hood (Allan Arbus) and her boyfriend who's in cahoots with the gang lords and cops. But Coffy triumphs and, Weiler hopes, goes back to the operating room.

ART IN SWITZERLAND

Basel Fair—A Gigantic Panorama

By Joy Davenport

BASEL, June 22 (IHT).—With roughly 300 galleries and editors under one gargantuan roof, statistically the Basel Art Fair has reached some kind of world record. It is saved from chaos only by good Swiss organization.

The maze of partitioned white walls makes a floor plan essential and a full day is needed to do a reasonable job of looking. The popular international artists Matta, Max Ernst, Jean Dubuffet, Miró, Richard Linder, Horst Anthes, Allan Davies, Dali, etc., seem to be everywhere and are not news. But sometimes an exceptional work stops you short as if the function of mediocre art is to make great art look even better. Besides, there are younger artists to be discovered and if that tired adage "art is dead" is true, they don't know it in Basel.

An exhibition in billboard proportions of 31 American artists, the biggest of big names, is shown upstairs in Room 15. Surrounding European art, in contrast, is smaller, more cautious, more introspective. Jumbling together the two cultural approaches makes it evident that one force needs the other for a successful balance of aesthetic possibilities. And today both are interdependent.

From England, Alexander Postan presents some choice constructivists. Julian Treelan's 1936 linear, spindly acrobatics. Max Olderock's 1928 fragmented lunar/solar compositions and Lother Schreyer's 1923 terse pen drawing are prototypes of today's concept art. John Piper's predominately black watercolors, especially his "Brittany Beach" (1961), are small calligraphic marvels with depth and sensitivity.

Jack Coulthard's austere frontal surrealism of Italian villa motifs, goldfish and zones of Delft blues are more than decorative at Mercury Gallery.

Romantics

Another English artist enamored of Italian gardens is Rosie Lee. Her delightful bird garden can be seen at Piccadilly. A curious and beautiful woodland scene by Lorenezen-Munchen and Franz von Stuck's femme fatale "Die Sunde," are the ultimate in romantic painting. At the same gallery, Matta Caprice is represented by two fine colored drawings, one, an anatomical extension splayed over nine rectangles, the other, improbably lumpy clowns in nine sequences.

From Ricard Feigen, an unusually composed Bonnard of a red roof, with a landscape behind, flickers sumptuously in rose sunlight. Two tiny Picasso drawings —warring centaurs and a free scrawl of horses—makes one regret that he, unlike his work, could not live forever.

Galerie Beyler has a stall of about 20 Rothko and Albers paintings. The effect, needless to say, is splendid.

At Art in Progress, Ed Moses's pastel, watery strokes on plastified tissue paper with rough edges resemble three huge, illuminated manuscripts for his personal Bible.

Galerie Craven shows Armond Avril's wood and cork totem reliefs and Portuguese Mario Chicharro's delightfully carved and painted pressed-wood astrologies, combining Latin folklore and Parisian city life.

The fascination of abstract rationalism is to be found in two of the outstanding booths—those of Denis René, Hans Meyer. Some subdued Soto white-on-white constructions are like icy reeds upon a frozen pool. Jan Schoonhoven's papier maché reliefs, among others, illustrate Western man's search for dogma. His answers are frail cosmic tors; the seeking produces a poetry often extraordinarily close to basic natural phenomena.

Leonard Hutton Gallery exhibits an Javlensky head of lush, sensual beauty, a real museum piece. Also there are a Kandinsky circus (1913) and a rare coloration in yellow and white by Franz Marc of does in the snow.

In Bridgette Coudrain's flower etchings (Galerie Orangerie) materiel and image have a delicate, symbiotic relationship. Otmer Alt's work ressembles abstract versions of Baj and are serigraphs of jocular form and texture. Françoise Deberdt's organic fantasies, a cosmology of things going on inside stomachs, eyes and other places, are zany happenings.

Opposites

Friedrich Schöreder-Sonnenstern's crayon works on the evils of flesh incorporate an indulgent zeal for polar opposites. Originals are at Galerie Fey and Nothelfer and prints scattered everywhere.

There is a dearth of not so naive naifs from Yugoslavia and, for profoundly disturbing reasons, an endless parade of repulsive women for every kind of male ego hang-up—mostly from Germany and Austria.

Postage stamp-sized fumetti by Pablo Echaurren concerning the four elements painted in glossy enamel, showing restraint and humorous intensity, are at Galleria Schwarz, along with the boxes of Ugo Dossi and wood constructions by Bruno Conte.

Three tiny perfect Fontanas, "Left Hand Measure" by Paolo Icaro and choice prints that show Sol Lewitt at his best are some of the dependable surprises at Anna Marie Verne. There and at Galerie Kruzinger, like welcome invitations, are sculpted philosopher's stones by Karl Prantil in undulating, elegant marble.

Twenty-eight serigraphs by Antonion Calderara, pale and luminous work with an off-beat symmetry, are published by Hofhaus Presse. Other graphics include the rich range of Dieter Rot—from rusty iron to chocolate—superbly printed Hartmut Kaminskis and Bernard Lüginbuehls work are also at Ziegler. From Parisol Press, Dorothea Rockburn has a new portfolio of six white, icy-clean etchings on creased bristol.

Lodewyk Karseboom (cardboard reliefs) and Jacob Bill (shimmering ribboned colors) are among the Swiss neo-constructivists at Suzanne Bollag. And a Robert Natkin is as example of the small jewels to be found there.

Stähli

Swiss Luciano Castelli's loose graphic adaptations are linked to the world of magic. The casually drawn vacation land of Heiner Kielholz, in a sort of existential Cook's tour style, and Paul Thek's "Homage to Lucerne"—pyramidal concepts including psalm-like poems in pastel tempera on newspaper—are some of the talent to be seen at Stähli.

Other young Swiss artists worth noting are Jean Manboules (fragmented glass studies mounted on white) and Franz Eggenschwiler (on the mysteries of material), both at Galerie Medici.

Johannes Gachnang's new etchings, Casper Otto Melcher's cuneiform stamps on large scrolls of paper and Markus Dulk's Twombly-like drawings on milligram paper are at Stummer and Hubschmidt.

Klaus Baumgartner's wonderful little man in a fedora struts through a mixed-media world of color smears and paper scraps at Galerie Brambach, along with some other pleasant work by Swiss artists.

The enigmatic is a specialty at Stampa with a good rostrum of both Swiss and "foreign" not-quite-out-of-this-world types, intensely and intelligently ahead of their time.

This is by no means all. The catalogue alone weighs two kilos. One gets the feeling of that impact of human diversity and of unlimited vitality. And that these are the inherent values defended by the artistic function with inexhaustable brilliance.

Gübelin has watches that are not one split second ahead of their time—but still several years.

Certain practical-minded people insist that the purpose of a watch is to keep accurate time. Since there's no denying this, Gübelin carries all manner of time-pieces for the practical-minded. Plain, sports, smart watches, stopwatches, diving watches, hourglasses, pilot's watches, ladies' watches, children's watches, wall clocks, sundials, table clocks, alarm clocks, quartz clocks—and practically anything else that's been invented to keep time.

Gübelin owes it to the reputation of the house to carry only fine watches from its own factory and the best-known Swiss watchmakers. And none go out the door unless they safeguard perfect time.

But Gübelin also owes it to the reputation of the house to make some very different watches. Not that they keep any less accurate time; they don't. But timekeeping is not their sole or even their main function. And it's these watches—timepieces and jewelry in one—that have made Gübelin famous, particularly among people to whom a minute or two and a frame or two are secondary.

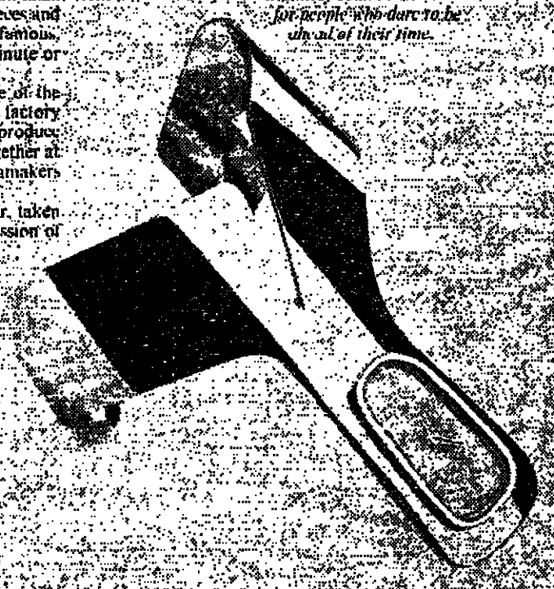

The reason is simple. Gübelin is one of the very few jewelers who also have a watch factory of their own. And anyone who wants to produce a truly new watch these days must get together at one table a highly qualified staff of watchmakers and of jewelry designers.

For Gübelin this is an every-day affair, taken as much for granted as the endless procession of design awards. The most recent, the Golden Rose of 1972, went to a bracelet watch called, from its appearance, the anaconda watch.

Bracelet watches are a synthesis of bracelet and wristwatch that eliminates the most delicate part of the watch—the strap. They are available in various versions for ladies and gentlemen.

The person who wears one can always tell exactly what time it is. And everyone else can tell that she's ahead of her time.

The anaconda watch by designer Kurt Flora is available in platinumplated silver at sFr. 580.– and in yellow gold. Only from Gübelin, of course, and only for people who dare to be ahead of their time.

President and Chairman

The leaders of the Soviet Union and the United States have vividly staked their personal reputations on the commitment to political détente between two superpowers, whatever the opposition on specific issues they may respectively anticipate on their homefronts.

For both Nixon and Brezhnev, the commitment to Soviet-American cooperation came only in political middle age. President Nixon rode the anti-Communism bandwagon to national leadership; Chairman Brezhnev was once regarded as the Politburo's leading champion of the Kremlin arms-shakers.

Now they have achieved a joint statement of principles for controlling strategic arms, aimed at reviving the stalled momentum of the Strategic Arms Limitation Talks. How well the two sides succeed in the venture now resumed will depend on the way principles translate into specifications in the treaty to be achieved next year. Those who have been skeptical of Mr. Nixon's policies in the field of arms control—both those who favor more far-reaching steps toward disarmament and those who fear the limitations already accepted—will want to study the administration's detailed explanations of the new principles before rushing to judgment.

Progress in the arms talks was Mr. Nixon's prime hope for the present summit meeting. In contrast, even before Mr. Brezhnev left Moscow it was clear that his main objective was in the field of trade: the conclusion of large-scale long-term agreements with the United States that would require billions of dollars of American credits for their implementation. Much of the maneuvering in the talks so far has been over how these two questions could be related. Soviet spokesmen claimed that trade is not a precondition to agreement on other matters. But repeated emphasis on the "trust" that would allegedly be produced by long-term trade agreements came close to implying that such accords are actually prerequisite for further progress.

The real trade issue concerns the balance of advantage to both countries in the light of the alternatives open to them. Specifically, the Soviet Union probably has no other potential trade partner that could offer it credits in the magnitude of those it wants from the United States. From the American point of view, those billions of dollars in credits could be used by the United States for a variety of other purposes, from developing domestic sources of fuel by, say, gasification of coal, to mounting a crash program for achieving thermonuclear fusion as a source of energy—an area that the Soviet and American leaders have now agreed could be jointly researched.

In commercial matters such mundane issues as price or the interest rate to be paid on credits are always central questions, but it is precisely such vital details that Mr. Brezhnev and his spokesmen have avoided in their public comments. In the case of the proposed arrangements for American aid in development of Siberia's gas and oil resources, it is certainly essential that American investors be permitted to conduct their own geological evaluation of the fuel resources in any area where they are being asked to invest huge sums.

In respect to both arms control and trade, the details tell more than the principles. But the latter naturally come first, and thus the summit seems to be accomplishing its primary purpose.

Arab Ice-Breaker?

Shortly after the June 1967 Arab-Israeli war, President Habib Bourguiba of Tunisia called for an end to the Arab countries' state of belligerency against Israel, denouncing the Arab position as a "dead-end policy."

His was a voice in the wilderness. A few days later at the Khartoum conference, which Bourguiba boycotted, other Arab leaders proclaimed a continuing policy of "no peace with Israel, no negotiations with Israel, no recognition of Israel. . ."

Six years later, the moderate Tunisian leader is still a maverick in the Arab world. It is difficult to imagine any other Arab leader speaking as forthrightly as Bourguiba did the other day in Geneva when he called for talks between Arabs and Israelis for a "just and lasting peace" based on recognition of the rights of all in the area, including the right of Israel "not to be exterminated and cast into the sea."

Although Bourguiba is still far out in front of his Arab peers, he may no longer be entirely alone in his pleas for a more realistic approach to the fact of Israel's existence. In the eyes of growing numbers of Arabs, time has more than justified his original assessment of the futility of the old policy of confrontation. Egypt, which long ago backed away from the three no's of Khartoum, took a significant step along the Bourguiba road to compromise recently when it proposed, as the Tunisian president has, creation of a Palestinian state to coexist with Israel. This, as a Palestinian resistance publication points out, would mean recognition of "the legitimacy of the Zionist presence on Palestinian soil."

It has been reported that Bourguiba has been seeking a meeting with Premier Golda Meir, a prospect that has been warmly welcomed in Israel. Such a meeting obviously could not substitute for talks between Israel and representatives of Arab states and peoples most directly involved in the Arab-Israeli conflict. But a Bourguiba-Meir summit could be a momentous ice-breaker for such talks, a triumph for the lonely voice of reason so long ignored in the Middle East.

International Opinion

Brezhnev-Nixon Meeting

Regular bilateral meetings are already spoken of in Moscow and in Washington... This is a considerable change... and it is at the same time a warning. Even if they still have thousands of afterthoughts, the two camps agree that the conversations will mark the passage from "détente to entente." It is not unreasonable to think—even without creating deep anti-Americanism or bitter anti-Communism—that this entente will be accomplished at the expense of the European community, which neither of the Big Two has any reason to hold dear... This collusion calls for a certain vigilance from the Europeans.

—From Les Echos (Paris).

Europeans fear that one day the world will be partitioned at their expense into two zones of influence. This seems excessive and any comparison with Yalta is absurd... But it is nonetheless true that the visit of Leonid Brezhnev to the United States will once more show that Europe, demographically, industrially and technologically powerful, has ridiculously little political weight in the world compared with the Big Two, and at a time when the Big Two are getting into the habit of settling their problems between themselves.

—From Le Figaro (Paris).

Peron's Return

Mythology demanded that General Peron's return to Argentina be a celebration of popular unity. Reality made it a gun battle in which many people died. Can the myth survive?... The apparent unity that was achieved in opposition is unlikely to survive in office and people will quickly see that General Peron has no power to bring back the golden age that he is believed to have embodied.

The gun battles probably mark only the beginning of the gray dawn after the victory celebrations.

PARIS—At last the army of invasion has landed on Cuban soil. Today's despatches report that General Shafter's forces began disembarking at Baiquiri, about 12 miles east of Santiago. The operation was effected under cover of bombardments at various adjacent points. In spite of this stratagem, a large force of Spaniards were encountered, but were successfully driven back with the aid of a body of Cubans.

'We'll Say This Is the Greatest Meeting Since the Creation'

'I Don't Believe In the Creation'

The Nixon-Brezhnev Promises

By James Reston

WASHINGTON.—The Nixon-Brezhnev agreements on the limitation of strategic offensive arms and the joint development of peaceful atomic energy promise a great deal more than they deliver, but at least they maintain the spirit of cooperation.

Even if there is less in these documents than meets the eye, they are letters of intent. They are saying that the two most powerful nations in the world believe they have more to gain by cooperating with one another than by fighting one another, and that even limited agreements in the fields of arms control, atomic energy development, trade and culture may eventually lead to a more dependable world order.

No world order can be established without getting rid of the mistrust that poisoned the relations between Washington and Moscow in the first generation after World War II, and this is the main thing that is going on now. They are building confidence rather than trading gas for wheat.

If you look at the Soviet Union's economic and political arrangements with the non-Communist states over the last few years, it is easy to argue that Moscow had gained more than it has given. The present basis for negotiation rests on assumptions highly favorable to the U.S.S.R.

The Soviets have negotiated formal acceptance by the West of the wartime boundaries, which is a polite way of saying that the West has accepted the division of Germany, and the establishment of a Soviet sphere of influence in Eastern Europe, now occupied by Soviet troops.

A Question

Meanwhile, the Soviet Union is getting from her former cold war adversaries the grain and the modern technology her own system has not been able to provide. This still troubles a lot of people here who would have preferred to see the Communists crippled by the consequences of their own failures and who ask, What do we get out of all this?

The short answer in the short run is, not much. Moscow wants credits now for the development of gas and other raw materials which will not be available for years to come. Her benefits are tangible and immediate; ours on the whole are intangible and remote, and yet there is something to be said for the administration's patient efforts to bring both the Soviet Union and China into closer contact with the changing and interdependent modern world.

If both sides come to believe that they do not have to live in fear of destruction by the other, it may be possible to get the arms race under control. It will be a very slow business, but the nations of the world are now spending over $220 billion a year on their military establishments, and they are not likely to find the resources to deal with their growing populations until they can make substantial reductions in their defense budgets.

Principles

The Nixon-Brezhnev communiqué on the limitation of strategic offensive arms deals more in principles than in specifics. It does little more than give the SALT II negotiators new instructions to get back to Geneva and try to come up with "a permanent agreement on more complete measures" to control strategic weapons.

This is about all they could do for the time being, for they are now negotiating the most complicated problem ever attempted by two sovereign nations, not merely to limit the numbers of nuclear weapons, but to agree on the quality of those weapons —on such things as multiple warheads on missiles, and the old problem of inspection and verification of whatever agreements are reached.

Both President Nixon and General Secretary Brezhnev are likely to be out of office long before the objectives of their agreements are reached, but they are keeping the process of negotiation going, and if as much progress is made in the next 27 years before the end of the century as was made in the last 27 years since the end of the Second World War, these meetings may achieve the historic objectives claimed for them by the two leaders.

Even personal freedom, which seems to terrify the Communists more than atomic weapons, is making a little slow progress as a result of these talks. The freedom of the Soviet Jews to emigrate to Israel has not been solved, but mainly as a result of pressure from here. Brezhnev has made some concessions and has tolerated American interference with his internal laws more than any American President would have tolerated similar interference from the Soviet Union.

Meanwhile, Brezhnev will get a look at this vast continental country and a better understanding of its political and business leaders. Looking back 14 years, Nikita Khrushchev came here and went away, not with any great agreements, but with a few doubts about his own anti-American prejudices. Relations between the two countries, helped no doubt by growing Sino-Soviet hostility, have been improving ever since.

Accordingly, the question is not whether these agreements have established an ideal or even sensible relationship between the two giants, but whether they have maintained the negotiating process and made things better than they were. After all, an isolated and frustrated Soviet Union with enough atomic weapons to blow up the world is not a very happy prospect. Even an unequal deal, if it builds confidence, is better than that.

East of the Ostpolitik

By C. L. Sulzberger

BELFAST.—The cold war in Germany officially ended June 21—one day after an exchange of notes between Bonn and East Berlin acknowledging that both capitals of Europe's largest partitioned state have ratified an accord recognizing each other's existence. Those countries which have not yet recognized the East German Democratic Republic are expected swiftly to do so.

This latest step away from Chancellor Adenauer's policy, based on nonrecognition of the East and integration of the West German Federal Republic into a NATO so strong that it could be relied upon to overawe a Soviet bloc including Prussia is but the first step in Chancellor Brandt's new Ostpolitik.

That approach was largely arranged by Egon Bahr, special minister in Brandt's Social Democratic government, the chancellor's "Kissinger," his principal policy planner and negotiator. As usual in moves toward East-West accommodation in Germany, Bahr worked closely with Michael Kohl, state secretary in the East Berlin regime.

There is no doubt that for Bahr this shift away from stalemated Bonn policy—which seemed even further from its goals as NATO's relative strength weakened—is but an initial advance along a new and untested diplomatic road.

Bahr Interview

That road was described by Bahr on Jan. 9, 1969, in an interview with Walter F. Hahn of the Foreign Policy Research Institute, Philadelphia. The interview, together with Hahn's analysis of Bonn's Ostpolitik, was recently published in Orbis, the institute's quarterly.

According to this account, which provoked loud complaints in the West German opposition, subsequent steps of the Ostpolitik would lead to eventual dismantling of NATO, reduction of U.S. and Soviet forces in both parts of Germany by between 30 and 50 percent, and creation of a new collective security system in Europe.

This would include both Germanys and exclude the four nuclear powers directly involved —Russia, America, Britain and France. Denmark and the Benelux countries would be included for the West; Poland, Czechoslovakia and Hungary in the East.

Bahr's long-term concept has special importance because he is clearly the chancellor's right-hand man on these matters and diplomatically outweighs Foreign Minister Scheel just as Kissinger outweighs Secretary of State Rogers in the United States. Bahr, a 51-year-old Thuringian, is a former journalist who joined the Social Democrats in 1957.

According to Hahn, the first step in the Bahr-Brandt Ostpolitik would be recognition of the East German government and an exchange of plenipotentiaries. This has now been achieved. The second step would be a set of "renunciation of force" agreements between Bonn and all East European capitals recognizing existing frontiers in Europe.

The third would be major reduction of American and Soviet forces in both Germanys, arranged on a reciprocal basis. And the fourth would be establishment of a collective security system for Central Europe which would end in dissolution of both NATO and the Warsaw Pact alliance.

Bahr is quoted as saying: "The two alliances would have to be dissolved and replaced perhaps by new bilateral relationships between the superpowers and the remaining countries in Europe outside the collective security system itself" (in other words not including the Germanys, Denmark, Benelux, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary).

The Unfolding

Hahn makes the point in his analysis (four years after the interview) that Brandt's Ostpolitik "has since unfolded in startling conformity with the step-by-step strategy projected by Bahr." He points out that a conference on security and cooperation in Europe and preliminary negotiations on mutual and balanced force reductions by the Eastern and Western coalitions have assumed shape. Certainly this makes it easier to accomplish the ultimate aims attributed to Bahr.

Hahn concludes that "any meaningful integration of Western Europe cannot be reconciled with a successful continuation of Ostpolitik." This assessment seems logical and there are signs that Western Europe has not recently moved toward that unified "community" envisioned but a few months ago. Moreover, there are great economic pressures inside both Russia and America encouraging mutual force withdrawals.

NATO worries about this and fears that, as the alliance weakens, West Europe will become subject to "Finlandization." After all Soviet Russia is so much stronger than its Western neighbors that if the latter weakened their ties to the United States, they will become increasingly weak. Moscow doesn't need similar links with Communist East Europe.

And the most worried capital is Peking, which thinks it knows just where the Kremlin will send divisions pulled out of Europe—to the Chinese border.

Letters

A Propos

Permit me to cite what must be one of the earliest authoritative statements on Watergate and Nixonian democracy:

"I have an idée fixe: it is that one can and one must govern men without deceiving them. If in private life lying is evil, in public life it is a crime . . . A government that lies is a conspirator more dangerous than the murderer that it has beheaded legally . . . the crime, that is, the lie is the greatest of sins: in eschewing the truth, the spirit abdicates; and, by a curious reversal, it is the master who becomes humiliated before the slave, for the man who deceives is inferior to the man who is deceived. This applies to government, to literature as well as to religion." (Le Marquis de Custine, La Russie en 1839, 2nd ed., Paris, Vol. II, 1843, pp. 134-135.)

Height of Something

Let no one be deceived by the specious logic in citing the Eiffel Tower's height as justification for skyscrapers (IHT, June 19).

The Eiffel Tower has grace, lightness and airiness. It's especially graceful because it has curves. In construction, curves cost more, and skyscraper owners evidently are so intent on money they permit architects to use only straight lines and harsh right angles. No that the modern pillars at the base of a skyscraper are square, not round.

In general, a skyscraper's exterior is what any unimaginative child would conceive: a kind of box. The Maine-Montparnasse Tower has two curved sides and therefore it is slightly less offensive esthetically than most new U.S. skyscrapers; otherwise it is a too-high truncated pyramid violating the sky and strumpeting the architectural harmony of Paris.

The Eiffel Tower has a spacious setting of tree-spread parkland. While it contributes to traffic congestion there, this is nothing to the traffic problems a skyscraper compounds in a commercial area. The Eiffel Tower's function is to give humans pleasure, a fun place where they happily mingle. A skyscraper is a human filing cabinet where they work.

U.S. Plebiscite?

It appears that Watergate is bringing the U.S. government to an impasse. On the one hand, the economic and energy crises make it apparent that the executive branch has been immobilized. On the other hand, the President, convinced that his national security defense has won support from the silent majority, refuses to resign. At the same time, Congress seems unwilling to seriously consider impeachment.

One way out may be for Congress to call a national plebiscite. The only issue before the people would be whether the President should resign. If Nixon receives a vote of confidence, his power to govern will be restored. If the people call for his resignation and he refuses, perhaps Congress will have the backbone to impeach.

FINANCIAL NEWS AND NOTES

Petrofina Calls Eldfisk Commercial

Petrofina SA chairman Jacques Meeus reports that the Eldfisk find in the North Sea is "important and commercial." However, no reserve figures are yet available, he told an extraordinary shareholders' meeting. The Eldfisk find is in the Norwegian sector of the North Sea about 20 kilometers south of the Ekofisk field. Last August initial testing of the discovery well recorded flow rates of nearly 5,000 barrels a day, and Phillips Petroleum Co., operator for the consortium, said it expected the well to yield 10,000 barrels daily after development. In March this year Phillips reported an extension well flowed 13,500 barrels daily from two zones and earlier this month Petrofina said another extension well tested at 10,300 barrels daily.

BOAC Has Profit in Year

A surge in transatlantic travel has provided an unexpected profit for British Overseas Airways Corp. The airline reports that its operations on the Atlantic routes in the year up to March 31 showed a profit of £200,000 instead of the expected deficit of £12 million. Revenue was more than 25 percent up on the previous year although costs leaped by £1.5 million—largely to sterling flotation. "Competition has never been more fierce but we have increased our share of the markets," says Gordon Davidson, general manager for BOAC's western routes. But he warns that forward bookings for July and August are down on last year.

U.S. Revises Firms' Profit Figures

Corporate profits in the United States in the booming first quarter were even better than originally calculated, the Commerce Department reports. Revising the figures it released a month ago, the department said after-tax profits in the period rose to an adjusted annual rate of $63.7 billion, rather than the $62.3-billion rate originally reported. That was up from a $57.2-billion annual rate in the previous quarter and a $49.5-billion pace in the year-earlier quarter. Pretax profits in the first quarter were at an annual rate of $114.3 billion, revised upward from the $113.1-billion rate reported earlier. Pretax profits were at a $101.5-billion rate in the final quarter of 1972 and an $88.2-billion rate a year earlier.

Worried About Political Consequences

East Germany Cool to Economic Détente

By Dan Morgan

EAST BERLIN, Jan. 22 (WP). —Poles have been drinking Pepsi-Cola for almost a year now, and Hungarians can fill up their gasoline tanks at Shell stations. East Germans drink their own sweet soda, which they call "cough syrup," and the familiar yellow Shell sign is not part of their landscape.

East Germany seems to be the exception to the trend in Eastern Europe toward greater acceptance of capitalist credits and economic cooperation with the West.

Ideological reservations about broader cooperation with the West have practically disappeared in most of the other countries, but East German officials say they are still worried about the political consequences of indebtedness to capitalist banks.

Hungary, Romania and nonaligned Yugoslavia all have provisions for direct capital investment, but responsible officials here say flatly they are not interested in joint ventures and are not in the market for long-term credits.

Surprising Wariness

The wariness is surprising in some ways. It is generally considered the most industrialized Communist country, and therefore a natural partner of advanced Western countries. Three quarters of its exports to the West are industrial products, compared with 30 percent of the Soviet Union's and Poland's.

Yet years of isolation and enforced self-sufficiency appear to have left their mark on national economic thinking. That period resulted in the East German economy becoming even more closely linked with the Soviet Union than did those of other East European countries.

In conversations at factories, a visitor notes a suspicion which seems to be fading in other East European countries. At the huge petrochemical plant at Schwedt, a company official suggested that the organization had been swindled by French and British businessmen who sold them a refining process a few years ago.

After the equipment was installed, it failed to function. After a year and a half, the Western technicians still could not make it work, the official said.

Lesson Learned

"We finally sent the foreigners home and worked out the problem with our own engineers," he said. "We learned our lesson. In the future we are going to make sure we have an airtight contract when we deal with Western businessmen."

On the other hand, Western businessmen often say that doing business here is easier than in many other Communist countries.

"The East Germans are the best to deal with because they know just what they want," said an IBM official.

Western economic analysts say that East Germany's technology is at such a level that the country is under less pressure to go West for licenses and deals than are Poland, the Soviet Union and other countries. But they point out that East Germany is under the same pressures as those other countries to improve the quality of its production, and provide more consumer goods. This makes it unlikely that it will be able to resist the East European trends indefinitely.

The major factor in East Germany's Western trade is West Germany. Its 1972 treaty with Bonn contained a pledge to strengthen inter-German trade. East Germany already markets hundreds of products, from women's tights and television sets to the paper on which the anti-Communist Bild Zeitung newspaper of Hamburg is published, in the Federal Republic.

This trade, which is regarded as domestic, not international, has risen rapidly and has been surprisingly unaffected by political developments. In 1972 it reached the equivalent of $1.8 billion. West Germany has encouraged the trade through various preferences, such as elimination of tariffs.

The special trade arrangement with Bonn has also meant that East Germany has not had to aggressively seek out Western credits and trade as Poland, Hungary and Russia have had to do.

But the trade agreement expires in 1975. Bonn has usually refrained from playing politics with the arrangement, but some Western sources say that Bonn's renewal of it may depend on East Germany's willingness to guarantee West Berlin's energy supply.

Exporters Failing to Take Advantage of Dollar Cut

WASHINGTON, June 22 (AP).—Devaluation of the dollar has made American goods more attractive in foreign countries but U.S. exporters are not taking full advantage of the new opportunity, the Commerce Department said yesterday.

Reporting on a survey of reports submitted by U.S. embassies, the department said the devaluation of Feb. 12 has "enhanced the competitive position of many American manufactured goods now being exported" and has created markets for new exports. In addition U.S. exports are being strongly stimulated by high levels of economic activity in most industrial foreign nations.

However, "many American exporters are either unable or unwilling to take full advantage of the opportunity, largely because of the tight supply situation in the United States," the department said. The survey results were contained in the department's publication Commerce Today.

Since April 1971, the report said, the two devaluations of the dollar and changes in the values of other currencies have resulted in an average reduction of 8.2 percent in the cost of dollars to foreign importers. At the same time, the currency changes have caused an increase of 14.2 percent in the cost of foreign money to U.S. importers.

National Steel Seeks Access To Soviet Aluminum Process

By Theodore Shabad

MOSCOW, June 22 (NYT).— National Steel Corp. of Pittsburgh, which has entered the aluminum business in recent years, is negotiating for a Soviet process that may help open up newly discovered U.S. mineral deposits for the making of aluminum.

Chappell Chandler, vice-president of National's aluminum subsidiary, said in a telephone interview from Leningrad yesterday that the Soviet process "looks very good and may result in a commercial operation" at a proposed alumina plant at Cedar City, Utah.

Alumina is the intermediate product in the making of aluminum metal. The Soviet process, using a mineral called alunite, would provide the U.S. aluminum industry with a significant domestic raw material supply besides imported bauxite, the industry's principal ore.

Bauxite Shortage

The Russians, because of a shortage of high-grade bauxite deposits in the Soviet Union, have pioneered in the use of other minerals, usually of lower grade, for aluminum making.

For the Soviet Union, the selling of a license on its alunite process would represent a significant source of income in the developing trade with the United States. One of the problems in expanding exchanges has been the Soviet Union's difficulty in matching heavy purchases of U.S. industrial equipment and technology with exports of her own.

The flow of technology has been heavy from the United States to the Soviet Union. But the Russians have also made technical advances in some areas of industry, particularly in metals, and these appear to be of growing interest to the United States.

Hitachi Net Soars By 35% in Year

TOKYO, June 22 (AP-DJ).— Hitachi Ltd., Japan's largest heavy electrical equipment maker, said today its net profit rose to 53.4 billion yen (about $202 million) in the year ended March 31, up 35 percent from 39.6 billion yen in 1971.

Consolidated sales rose to 1,288.4 billion yen from 1,218.5 billion yen, the company said.

Hitachi said its sharp rise in profits was due mainly to lower unit costs, brought about by a higher rate of production for several key products and a reduced work force.

The company also said results for the six months ending September may show a leveling tendency.

Dollar Drops As Banks Aid Italian Lira

France, Germany Set $1-Billion Credit Line

PARIS, June 22 (IHT).—The dollar weakened throughout Europe today, falling to a record low in Frankfurt, while France and West Germany acted to prop up another ailing currency, the Italian lira.

The Bank of France announced today that it and the West German Bundesbank have granted $1 billion in credit facilities to the Bank of Italy to help it defend the lira.

This credit facility is over and above the $1.9 billion being sought by Italy under the short-term support agreement among the Common Market central banks.

The swap agreement is designed to help a country with a troubled currency fight off speculation by purchasing large amounts of its own currency on foreign exchanges.

Italy's lira has been one of Europe's weakest currencies for months, mainly as a result of the political instability there. It is believed in Rome that the credit operation could be a big psychological prop that will stabilize the lira.

The dollar, meanwhile, plunged to a record low on the Frankfurt currency exchange. Shortly after opening it slumped to 2.5410 deutsche marks from the previous close of 2.5670 Wednesday. Yesterday was a public holiday. At the close today the dollar was 2.55 marks.

Frankfurt dealers cited two major reasons for the decline—selling in New York and covering against weekend uncertainties.

On the bullion markets, gold closed at $119.75 an ounce in London, down one dollar, and at $120.25 in Zurich. This was in contrast to the usual action in which the price of gold rises in inverse proportion to the fall of the dollar.

In a move related to gold, the U.S. Senate today approved legislation to allow Washington to sell gold to licensed domestic users as may be necessary to stabilize gold markets and improve the U.S. balance of payments.

The measure was tacked on to a bill setting up a federal financing bank. It has still to be approved by the House.

On other European exchanges the dollar weakened fractionally. It closed at 3.0385 Swiss francs in Zurich, down from 3.0415 francs yesterday. In London the pound gained slightly, closing at $2.5743 compared with the previous close of $2.574.

Sharp Advance Cut on Big Board

By Alexander R. Hammer

NEW YORK, June 22 (NYT).— The stock market scored a spectacular advance in the first half-hour of trading today and then prices steadily simmered down to finish with a modest gain on the New York Stock Exchange.

By 10:30 a.m. the Dow Jones industrial average had soared 19.04 points to 892.69 in response to a wave of buying resulting from the administration's announcement after the close yesterday that it had relaxed its dividend requirements. However, at the close the average was ahead only 6.17 at 879.82, its low for the day.

At that point advances outnumbered declines by about a 10-to-1 ratio with many stocks up 3 points or more. Analysts called the early upswing one of the strongest in history.

Trading in the first hour climbed to 5.83 million shares, the largest amount traded since May 25, when 6.15 million shares changed hands in the initial hour. The heavy trading on May 25 resulted mostly from profit-taking following a sharp rise in the market the day before.

Total volume today climbed to 18.47 million shares from 11.63 million shares yesterday.

The exchange's index, which includes all common stocks traded, reflected the performance of the market. After being up 0.97 at 10:30 a.m., the index eased throughout most of the day and finished 0.24 higher at 54.56.

Analysts noted that investors' continued concern over the inflationary spiral, higher interest rates and the weakness in the dollar abroad mainly acted to mute the early rally.

The dollar continued to weaken in European markets today.

Eastman Kodak climbed 1 7/8 to 132 3/8. Yesterday, it introduced the premium model of its pocket Instamatic camera.

GM Up a Point

General Motors topped the automotive group, picking up 1 1/8 to 54 3/8. Chrysler and Ford tacked on fractions.

Du Pont, also firm, rose 2 3/8 to 162 1/4. Dow Chemical climbed 1 3/8 to 52 1/8.

Caterpillar Tractor moved up 2 3/4 to 56 3/8, Johnson & Johnson 1 to 116 1/2, and Texas Instruments 1 1/4 to 92 3/4.

However, S. S. Kresge slumped 1 7/8 to 33. Chairman Robert E. Demar told the annual meeting that its new store openings in 1973 may fall below earlier company predictions.

McDonald's fell 2 1/4 to 56 1/4, and Tropicana Products 2 1/8 to 17 7/8.

Atlantic Richfield slipped 1 1/4 to 80 3/4 among the oils, while airlines generally surrendered fractions.

Prices declined in quiet trading on the American Stock Exchange. The Amex index fell 0.04 to 22.34, while declines topped advances, 467 to 333. Turnover amounted to 2.86 million shares, up from 2.47 million yesterday.

British Prices Rise

LONDON, June 22 (AP-DJ).— The British retail price index on May 22 was up 0.7 percent from a month earlier and 9.5 percent from May 1972, the Department of Employment said today.

NYSE Surveying 9 Brokers Beset by Financial Problems

NEW YORK, June 22 (NYT).— Nine member firms have been placed under special intensive surveillance by the New York Stock Exchange because of financial difficulties and some of them probably will have to be liquidated, a Big Board official disclosed yesterday.

Robert M. Bishop, vice-president in charge of the exchange's member firms department, did not identify any of the nine firms, but said the number under intensive surveillance was "about at a high."

He confirmed at a briefing for newsmen that most of the firms were retail-oriented, meaning that their business is largely with the public. He said "several" of them already were in the process of shifting their accounts to other firms.

Asked if any would be liquidated, Mr. Bishop responded: "Some of those firms will probably be liquidated in that sense, in that their assets will be acquired by another firm and a shell would be left that would be liquidated."

Mr. Bishop's remarks came at a time of growing concern about the financial condition of the securities industry. The decline in the stock market since January, coupled with sluggish trading volume, have caused many firms to incur operating deficits.

The Big Board official said the nine were among a total of 68 member firms that had been placed on a so-called "early warning" list because of losses which he described as "quite high in relation to their excess net capital."

It had been disclosed previously that at least 60 firms were being watched because of their losses, but it was the first time that an exchange official had publicly indicated that the losses among a portion of these were severe enough to require special surveillance.

Proposal Withdrawn

Eugene Miller, senior vice-president in charge of public relations and investor services, announced that the exchange's board of directors voted yesterday to withdraw a previous proposal for reimposing fixed minimum brokerage rates on the portion of orders exceeding $300,000 in value.

The major reason for this action, Mr. Miller said, was that the industry was "in such desperate need for the revenue package it proposed some time ago." He said the board hoped that abandoning its request for rate relief on large orders would help speed action by the Securities and Exchange Commission on a request for relief on smaller orders.

Earlier this month, the Big Board asked the SEC for approval to increase by 10 percent the commission rate on orders from $100 to $5,000 and by 15 percent on orders from $5,000 to $300,000. The purpose of these increases would be to overcome the current financial squeeze in Wall Street. The SEC has indicated it will hold hearings on this proposal.

Top U.S. Banks Raise Prime Rate

NEW YORK, June 22 (IHT).— A 7 3/4 percent prime lending rate became effective industry-wide today as several major banks applied the quarter-point increase initiated on Monday by First National Bank of Chicago.

That move was followed yesterday by Chemical Bank, Marine Midland and Harris Trust & & Savings.

Today the increase was brought in by such industry leaders as Bank of America, Chase Manhattan, First National City Bank, Manufacturers Hanover Trust, Crocker, Irving Trust, Mellon National Bank of New York and First National of Boston.

The move carries the interest rate that commercial banks charge to top corporate borrowers to its highest level since September 1971.

The "Commission de Contrôle des Banques," in its session held June 13, 1973, approved the accounts for the year 1972 and the proposals submitted by the Board of Directors for distribution of profits.

The profits of the year show a total of Fr. 125,390,840.61 as against Fr. 109,457,540.90 in 1971.

The dividend to shareholders has been maintained at Fr. 2 gross, which comprises the guaranteed minimum interest of Fr. 0.6963 and an additional interest of Fr. 1.3037.

This amount will be payable as of July 2, 1973, at the rate of Fr. 1.76 per share.

Criminals at Large

By Newgate Callendar

THIS week's fairy tale is William Judson's "Alice and Me" (Fields, $6.95). It follows a story line explored last year by Brian Garfield's "Death Wish," and will help New Yorkers live out their fantasy life. The idea is that crime is increasing and nobody seems to be doing anything about it. Or, worse, nobody seems able to do anything about it. The System has gone haywire. So what would happen if a concerned citizen took the law into his own hands?

In the Garfield book, the concerned citizen was a liberal, educated Jew. In the Judson novel, he is a pure savage, a child of nature who finds himself in New York by accident. This 70-year-old woodsman-hunter-philosopher takes up with a young lady, and both face the New York jungle. There are wry comments about justice as currently practiced in the courts and law offices; about topsy-turvy legalities that make self-defense a crime; about the beasts who inhabit the jungle. So the woodsman gets a gun and starts doing something about the situation.

Judson wants his book to be a parable. On the one side there is old Fred, a natural man who sees things exactly as they are. On the other is young Alice, civilized and confused. She wants to act, but the pressures of society have made her a psychic weakling. Finally, she does bring herself to act. There the author stops. Will she? Can she? All this is told in a neat prose style and a sense of the absurd. Judson has come up with a winner.

Equally good, though in an entirely different category, is a British import, "Colonel Butler's Wolf" by Anthony Price (Doubleday, $4.95). This is one of those wheels - within - wheels - within-wheels espionage books. It brings in student activists, Russian agents and counteragents and, of all things, archaeology. It's all smooth, brainy and literate. Even the title contains a pun: for "wolf," read "Beowulf." The emphasis is as much on character as it is on plot, and yet there is enough action to soothe the most villainous reader.

Price is a relative newcomer; his first book came out in the summer of 1971, and this is his third. It is that much defter and more confident than its predecessors—and those were fine to begin with. Price soon will be one of the best in his field.

Joyce Shub, the wife of a former Moscow correspondent, gives us an unflattering picture of present-day Russia in "Moscow by Nightmare" (Coward, McCann & Geoghegan, $5.95). Her protagonist (also the wife of a Moscow correspondent) gets mixed up with underground art and Soviet paranoia. More a straight novel than a mystery, this is a strong indictment of a society in which suspicion and fear are a way of life. Anybody who has ever spent any time in the Soviet Union will realize that Mrs. Shub's story and its ambience are true to life. When the Russians think that their interests are threatened, they do r around. This gripping nowhere near as engagi it might seem to be.

In Shelley Smith's "A Affair" (Doubleday, $ British privy councilor stupid thing and finds hi trouble. The book ends with -and there is a bitter a: It is hard to imagine t tral character acting w hasty irresponsibility whe a body on his hands. championships." A semifinalist in 1967 and 1970, Taylor will now be the No.3 seed in the weakened entry list.

Women Unite

The women's seeding remained unchanged as the females, who became a bit militant two days ago, said they would all appear as planned. The women, led by Wimbledon defending champion Billie Jean King, had demanded more money from the tournament's organizers because they said they would now be the center of attention.

The women were not given an increase in the purse. But until yesterday, the women did not have a players' association. They formed one last night, the International Tennis Players Association, and Mrs. King was voted its president.

Among male players left in the championships are Romanian Ilie Nastase, last year's runner-up; Czechoslovak Jan Kodes, Alex Metreveli of the Soviet Union and American Jimmy Connors.

Nastase, Kodes and Taylor are the only three players remaining from the original list of 16 seeds. Nastase, an ATP member, decided not to support the boycott after he was instructed to play by the Romanian Tennis Association.

Connors said he had been under great pressure to join the boycott. "I want to play," he said, " and I hope they cannot stop me."

Among players who have joined the boycott after earlier reports that they might play were Italian Adriano Panatta, Spain's Manuel Orantes and South African Frew McMillan.

ATP executive director Jack Kramer said: "It is a tragedy for Wimbledon and for us, but we had no alternative but to pull out our members."

Political Anger

In Parliament, the ATP decision was called "arrogant and petulant" by Conservative party politician Patrick Cormack, who called on the players who withdrew to be banned from world competition for life.

Cormack tabled a motion which "deplores the arrogant and petulant conduct of certain prominent lawn tennis players and urges the appropriate authorities to consider banning from future Wimbledon and other international tournaments all those who have withdrawn from the forthcoming championships."

Many of the players who withdrew began leaving for home today.

Dutchman Tom Okker said "What is the point?" when asked if he would stay to watch the tennis. Ken Rosewall prepared to return to Sydney. "I think quite a lot of good will come from our decision and the rules concerning players will be changed," said the Australian.

Stan Smith, the titleholder and top seed until he pulled out, said: "Every decision affects relationships—especially a decision like this. We are going to sit down and analyze the situation among the players."

Allan Heyman, president of the International Lawn Tennis Federation, said that the decision to boycott Wimbledon would "make life difficult in the immediate future." He said: "It is very unfortunate that this was a show of strength by the professionals on what was unfortunately a bad case and which has affected so badly the world's premier tournament.

"It is going to make life difficult in the tennis world in the immediate future for it is impossible to say how 99 percent of the nations will react."

He said the affair would be discussed at the federation's forthcoming annual meeting in Warsaw.

Heyman David, chairman of the All-England Club which organizes the Wimbledon tournament, said: "We are extremely sorry at the turn of events, but we are sure we will have a good Wimbledon. I am certain that 90 percent of the public are behind us."

Nastase in Final

LONDON, June 22 (NYT).—Ilie Nastase meets Roger Taylor in the finals in the Queen's Club tourney and these are two of the more recognizable names left in the watered-down Wimbledon that opens next Monday.

Romanian Nastase had a tremendous tussle on center court, today against Russia's Alex Metreveli and just escaped, 8-6, 9-7, 7-5.

Briton Taylor won easily from Australian Owen Davidson in the other semifinal, 7-5, 6-3.

In an inspired streak, American Julie Heldman had run off four upset victories during the week, beating Chris Evert yesterday. But she had no weapons to blunt the net-rushing tactics of Evonne Goolagong and was beaten, 6-0, 6-2. Olga Morozova of Russia defeated American Valerie Ziegenfuss, 6-2, 6-3.

United Press International.

ILIE'S NO LADY—Romanian Ilie Nastase is kept out of hotel room where women players are in the midst of forming the Women's International Tennis Association. The men players' group is boycotting Wimbledon.

Newest Feat of Miller Is Shooting Hole-in-One

By Lincoln A. Werden

AKRON, Ohio, June 22 (NYT).—Johnny Miller is still hot. The man who shot a record 63 four days ago to win the United States Open scored a hole-in-one yesterday and shared the first-round lead at 67 in the $160,000 American Golf Classic.

"It's the first ace for me in a major tournament," said the Californian, 26, who is tied with Forrest Fezler at 3 under par over the Firestone Country Club course.

Local officials reported that, including the rounds today, 4,136 rounds have been played over this 7,180-yard layout in the 12 years of this tournament's history and only one other competitor, Jerry Barber, in 1968, had scored an ace here.

The younger generation occupied most of the places near the top on this bright sunny day. Arnold Palmer, the 43-year-old exception, was in the group at 68 with Tom Kite Jr., like Fezler 23 years old; Jim Wiechers, 28, and J. C. Snead, 31.

Jack Nicklaus, who was not getting his irons close enough, finished at 69 after a bogey at the 18th.

Chuck Thorpe, a black campaigner from Detroit, was also at 69, as were Tom Shaw, Lou Graham, Kermit Zarley, Dave Eicherberger among others.

Bruce Crampton of Australia and Tom Weiskopf, each of whom has won three events on the tour this year, had a 70 and a 74, respectively. Weiskopf, who finished third at Oakmont, Pa., last Saturday, said, "I did everything bad today—driving, putting, and I even walked into the rough bad."

John Schlee, runner-up to Miller in the Open, was at 75. Bert Yancey, last year's winner here, had a 71. Lee Trevino is not competing.

Except for a one-day special pro-amateur tournament last Monday at Landover, Md., this is the first golf since the U.S. Open for Miller. "It's like playing on my home course here," he said. "I played here more often than on any course on the tour. I have a chart on how the greens break at all angles."

French Horse Takes Stakes At Royal Ascot

ASCOT, England, June 22 (UPI).—Rheingold confirmed his position as one of Europe's top middle-distance horses today with a six-length victory in the £17,250 ($48,125) Hardwicke Stakes at Royal Ascot.

"That was a good workout for St. Cloud," French jockey Yves Saint-Martin said after the 1-1/2 mile event.

He sent Rheingold, a head loser to Roberto in last year's English Derby, to the front two furlongs from home and then had it easy. Second behind the odds-on favorite in a field of four was Attica Meli, ridden by Geoff Lewis.

Judo Championships Suspend Mongolia

LAUSANNE, June 22 (UPI).—The International Judo Federation today excluded Mongolia from the world judo championships for failing to return a contested silver medal. The federation also barred Mongolia from participation in any future international events until it returns the silver medal won by Bakhasava Buidaa in the Olympic Games last year.

Buidaa had a positive dope test after he placed second in the lightweight class in Munich. He was ordered by the International Olympic Committee to return the medal.

Osteen Blanks Braves

Winning Keeps Dodgers Ahead

LOS ANGELES, June 22 (AP).—Southpaw Claude Osteen registered his sixth straight victory and Willie Crawford homered last night to pace the Los Angeles Dodgers to their sixth straight victory, a 5-0 triumph over the Atlanta Braves.

Running his won-lost record to 9-3, best on the five-man Dodgers' starting staff, Osteen, 33, pitched a four-hitter and chalked up his sixth complete game in 15 starts. It was his 37th major league shutout and his second of the season.

The Dodgers completed a four-game sweep of Atlanta as they took advantage of three Braves' errors for three unearned runs to maintain their three-game edge over San Francisco in the National League West. Los Angeles has won 11 of its last 14 games.

Pirates 2, Mets 1

At Pittsburgh, the Pirates scored a run on a walk play in the ninth inning to hand the New York Mets their fourth straight loss, 2-1.

The Pirates loaded the bases in the ninth off reliever Buzz Capra on walks to Gene Clines and Al Oliver sandwiched around Dave Cash's single. Reliever Tug McGraw came in and Bob Robertson grounded to Felix Millan who threw home for a forceout but Duffy Dyer threw the ball wildly into rightfield trying to double Robertson off first.

Rightfielder Rusty Staub then threw the ball to second base to nail Oliver who had overrun the bag, but Cash in the meantime came home with the winning run, barely beating the throw from shortstop Jim Fregosi to Dyer.

White Sox 2, A's 0

In the American League, Stan Bahnsen, though giving up 12 hits, pitched Chicago to a 2-0 shutout at home over the Oakland A's to keep the White Sox in first place in the Western Division. It was the first time Chicago has defeated Ken Holtzman, who had a 4-0 lifetime record against them, including a victory earlier this season.

Hermann opened the Chicago fifth with a double and scored on John Jeter's double. With two out and runners on first and third, May drilled a 3-0 pitch for a single to score Jeter.

Orioles 6, Red Sox 3

At Boston, Paul Blair drove in three runs with a homer and a single to pace Baltimore to a 6-3 victory in Boston. The Red Sox scored a run in the second inning but Blair put the Orioles ahead, 3-1, in the third with a single to drive in Al Bumbry, who had walked and advanced on a sacrifice. Blair also had another single in the game.

Yanks 5, Tigers 1

Thurman Munson and Felipe Alou belted two-run homers off Mickey Lolich to power Pat Dobson and the New York Yankees to a 5-1 victory over the Detroit Tigers in a rain-abbreviated six-inning game.

The victory was the Yankees' fourth in a row and boosted their lead to a game and a half in the East.

Twins 1, Angels 0

Bert Blyleven and Clyde Wright dueled for eight scoreless innings before pinch-hitter Joe Lis singled home the winning run in the ninth inning to give the Twins a 1-0 victory in Minnesota over California.

With one out in the ninth inning, Bob Darwin lined a single. When Steve Brye struck out, Darwin stole second base and then scored the winning run when Lis, hitting for Phil Roof, bounced a single up the middle.

No, They Don't Shoot Golfers

LEBANON, Tenn., June 22 (UPI).—Wearing two sets of gloves to protect his hands, and limping along on blistered feet, new grandfather Raymond Lasater called it quits yesterday after playing 1,530 consecutive holes of golf.

He eclipsed the world marathon golf record by 438 holes after 60 hours on the Hunter's Point course. He teed off at 6:30 a.m. Tuesday and reached the old mark of 1,092 straight holes set by two Florida youths last year at 12:45 p.m. Wednesday in a rainstorm.

"My hands and feet are awfully sore," Lasater, 44, said. "I guess it will take a couple of days for the soreness to work out."

French Fighter Needs Magic to Get Napoles' Title

By John Vinocur

GRENOBLE, June 22 (AP).—The $100-a-day boxing sorcerer hired to transform Roger Menetrey from plodder to pugilist for his welterweight title shot against Jose Napoles tomorrow said more time is needed for a transformation.

"I think in six months or a year Menetrey will be a complete boxer," Libero Golinelli said. "He isn't yet."

Golinelli is the Italian trainer that French newspapers insist on calling "The Sorcerer of Imola," the little Adriatic resort town where he took Menetrey to give the French boxer a semblance of technique.

"Let's say Roger was a little primitive on the technical level when I got him. He took too many punches. So we went to work," he said.

Now, Menetrey, 28, may have some moves to go with his strength, but every time in the past the European champion has had to think about defense and keeping his guard up, he's forgotten how to punch.

Napoles, 33, who's defending his title for the eighth time, has never suffered from such confusion. He's expected to be laughing all the way to the bank next week once he gets back to Mexico city with a reported purse of $125,000.

Menetrey is known to cut and Napoles will probably go quickly for his head. But the Mexican still remembers when he lost the welterweight title for six months in 1970-71 to Billy Backus on cuts and he's added American Angelo Dundee—who handles Muhammad Ali—to be patchman in his corner.

"I got butted in the Backus fight," Napoles said. "He was bleeding, too, but the doctor just kept coming to my corner. I got him in four rounds in the rematch."

Although films of Menetrey's fights are available, Napoles hasn't bothered to look and spends most of his time playing cards with kids at his hotel.

Menetrey, a quiet type who listens to classical music and prefers his home at Annecy, near the Swiss border, to life in Paris, will have planeloads of fans coming to the 15,600-seat Palais des Sports to scream for him.

Art Buchwald

Summer of '73

WASHINGTON.—The big question on everybody's mind is, "What do we do with the kids this summer?"

The idea of a teenager spending his holiday with his parents is so revolting to the teenager that no parent dares bring it up. Camp for most young people is out, and it is a lucky father and mother who can get a flunking child to go to summer school.

Buchwald

A recent survey among the teenage children of my friends revealed the following summer game plans:

A 15-year-old girl was going to drive across the United States in a Volkswagen with her closest friends, Sarah, Carl, Fred, Harriet, Lizabeth, Pat and George. When her parents asked their last names, their daughter said she didn't know.

A 16-year-old boy named Henry was going to Canada, where he heard rock bands were short on drummers. When asked what part of Canada was short on drummers, he said he couldn't be sure until he got there.

A 17-year-old named Henrietta was going to hitchhike through Europe with her boyfriend Ziggy. She met Ziggy last summer when she was hitchhiking in Mexico with her former boyfriend Norman.

Fourteen-year-old Michael had a bicycle trip planned from Washington, D.C., to the Virgin Islands. When it was pointed out that he might have to cross a large body of water on his bike Michael accused his parents of never letting him do anything on his own.

Sixteen-year-old Ethel and her twin sister Eunice accepted an invitation to sail from Bermuda to Southampton, England, with a fellow named Bob whom they met at the Grateful Dead concert at RFK Stadium.

Josh, who celebrated his 15th birthday last week, was going to join a "bunch of kids" who had rented a farm in Maine. There were 18 kids involved and two bedrooms in the farmhouse. When I asked him if he planned to do some farming this summer he looked at me as if I were out of my mind.

Mary Margaret said she had been invited to spend the summer with Suzy in Nantucket. A check with Suzy's parents by Mary Margaret's mother revealed that Suzy had told her mother she was spending the summer with Mary Margaret's parents in North Carolina. As of this writing the mystery of where Mary Margaret and Suzy are really planning to spend the summer is still unsolved.

Eighteen-year-old Stu bought a motorcycle with a share of IBM stock his grandmother had given him and he said he was going. When I asked where he was going he looked blank. "I'm just going, man, wherever the road takes me."

The only couple among my friends who seemed to have it made were the Parrishes. By good fortune they persuaded a friend of theirs to give their son Peter a job on an oil rig moored 20 miles off Louisiana in the Gulf of Mexico. The friend promised he wouldn't let Peter off the rig until Labor Day.

When the rest of our group heard about this we all started searching for friends who owned oil rigs. We then discussed the possibility of a group of us leasing an oil rig in the Gulf of Mexico or even the North Sea, where we could send our kids for the summer. Even if we didn't strike any oil it would be a worthwhile investment.

We would provide them with food, water, tapes and a two-month stock of Boone's Farm Apple Wine. Anything they wanted to do on the oil rig would be their own business.

A committee is now dickering with the Exxon company for a likely site. If we find one it will be the greatest summer that any parents in the United States could have.

Mrs. Carrero Rests After Madrid Surgery

MADRID, June 22 (UPI).—Maria Dolores Carrero, 62, the sister of Spain's new premier, Adm. Luis Carrero Blanco, rested quietly last night after surgery to remove pellets from her back and shoulder following a shotgun assault by a neighbor. Her condition was described as serious but not critical.

French humorist Pierre Daninos whose Major Thompson finds France taking everything personally.
Keystone.

Major Thompson Takes Another Look at France

PARIS (IHT).—Major William Marmaduke Thompson, DSO, OBE, the creation of French humorist Pierre Daninos, first appeared in print in 1954 and instantly found his way into French folklore. His bowler-hatted effigy stands in the Grévin wax museum, a furled copy of The Times freshly tucked under his arm each day.

When he began to observe French life, the Major noted rather harmlessly that the French shake hands excessively, always ask if the oysters are fresh (is any maître d'hôtel likely to say no they aren't?) and say such illogical things as allez, au revoir.

When Gen. Charles de Gaulle came to power, the Major became sharper. Now, in "Les Nouveaux Carnets du Major Thompson" (published in Paris by Hachette), the Major observes a duller, if not more serene, France which for once is not embattled with the rest of the world. This new atmosphere creates a real problem, as President Georges Pompidou pointed out in a speech at the Ecole Supérieure de Guerre:

"The problem for France is to recreate a spirit of patriotism without having an enemy, which is much harder than it was when the French had someone to hate," the president said.

But Mr. Pompidou did not count on the resourcefulness of the French. As Daninos points out, now that there is no longer a Franco-German, Franco-American or Franco-British problem, the number one problem in France today is le problème Franco-Français.

How, Daninos-Thompson asks, can you govern a country whose bosses insult the government, workers insult the bosses, and the middle classes insult the unions; where the peasants hate the Communists, the Communists the Socialists, the Socialists the Maoists, psychiatrists psychoanalysts, pedestrians automobilists. . . .

Even when France is at peace with the rest of the world, it is at war with itself as the current French vocabulary shows. The French language, notes the Major, has been mobilized: summer holidays are referred to as "la bataille des vacances" and a headline reads, "All quiet on the western autoroute front."

France, of course, always feels it is under attack. Even its bad weather is caused by anticyclones in the Azores, low pressure areas in Ireland, Scandinavian winds. The assaults on the French language have been so severe that government has had to take steps and, in the Journal Officiel, ban 493 foreign words that evidently entered the country clandestinely. Instead of "kitchenette," for example, the French are now enjoined to speak of a "cuisinette." It may be no prettier, but at least it's French.

Petty? Capricious? Yes, indeed, but as the Major points out, France is quintessentially feminine (pre-Women's Lib, needless to say). Major Thompson is hardly the first to speak of France as a woman: Gen. de Gaulle spoke of his (marriage) contract with her and André Malraux remarked that France had cuckolded De Gaulle, not with a vulgar political successor, but with Destiny. Further, directly upon the death of De Gaulle, President Pompidou made the astounding public statement: "La France est veuve" (France is a widow).

It is impossible, the Major points out, for any other country to imagine itself a widow. The United States? Britain? The Soviet Union? China? Most unlikely. And certainly only France can blush or refuse to blush, as the case may be: "France need not blush at what she has done." President Pompidou proclaimed last year in Chad. Can one imagine Germany blushing? asks the Major. Or Russia? No, only France has the negative power of not having to blush.

France also has the old-fashioned feminine trait of liking things in miniature: the word petit is so sympathetic that even the loathsome bourgeois is less hateful when he is a petit bourgeois. Diminutives are big here: Charlot (Chaplin or De Gaulle), Momo (Maurice Chevalier), Pompom (Pompidou). If Napoleon the Great doesn't strike a chord of sympathy among the French, the Little Corporal does.

And, of course, France is jealous. Let a Spaniard become an Olympic ski champion and the newspaper Le Figaro quickly points out that his skis and trainer were French, and so, logically, was his victory.

France takes everything personally, even when she is not involved directly. Noting that a government spokesman said, "We cannot but congratulate ourselves on the trip that Mr. Nixon plans to take to Peking," Daninos adds, "we are the only people on earth who, with a straight face, congratulate ourselves when there is no one else about to congratulate."

When France is not congratulating herself, she deplores. No nation deplores as much or as frequently as France: "She deplores everything of import that happens in the world without her, everything that is signed without her accord, everything that develops without her participation. She deplores conflagrations, aggressions, war and bad weather. . . . When a war breaks out in Bolivia or the Antipodes, France deplores that a political, pragmatic, pacific solution is not at hand. It is amazing, says the Major, that France thinks it is the only country to find a war deplorable.

France is a very serious lady, despite her past reputation. The Major points out that the small ads in French papers are always asking for a maid or a governess who is sérieuse. In England the ads in The Times ask for a nanny with a sense of humor ("sense of humor absolutely essential," says one ad, while another household says it seeks a "Happy Girl, 20 or over").

Major Thompson's sharpness may have been slightly dulled with time and, like all caricaturists, he sadly misses De Gaulle. But what he says is of interest because it is not addressed to the readers of such satirical publications as Le Canard Enchaîné or Charlie Hebdo but to the very square world of Le Figaro, a world not usually open to criticism.

As the Major continues to be heard, perhaps he will one day have a street named after him for, as Thompson-Daninos notes, the minute the heart of a great man ceases to beat, his name is given to a main artery. Not that Daninos-Thompson cares much for main thoroughfares: His heart goes out to the impasses, or dead end streets, such as the one named after one Robiquet who, according to Larousse, did much significant research on bitter almonds. Some day perhaps the Major will be similarly honored: The words Impasse Major Thompson have rather a nice ring.

PEOPLE: Mailer's 'Marilyn' Under Fire in Engl

The Evening Standard, a London afternoon daily, said Friday that the British publishers of Norman Mailer's biography of Marilyn Monroe ("Marilyn") had agreed to halt publication following an allegation that large sections were plagiarized from two earlier biographies of the actress.

The Standard reported that the publishers, Hodder & Stoughton, had agreed not to issue the book, due for publication in Britain on Oct. 8, until the matter had been resolved. The Standard quoted Mark Goulden, chairman of W. H. Allen, as saying that more than 250 sections of the book had been used by Mr. Mailer, without permission, from two biographies of Miss Monroe published by his company, "Norma Jean" by Frederick Guiles and "Marilyn Monroe" by Maurice Zolotow.

The paper quoted Mr. Goulden as saying that Mailer wrote to Guiles requesting permission to reproduce 28 specific quotes. He added: "Guiles, although he had no legal right to do so, said yes and asked for a set of proofs of the book when completed. When the proofs arrived, Guiles counted no less than 255 sections of his book lifted by Mailer, ranging from sentences to half pages of quotes."

At his home in Larchmont, N.Y., Robert Markel, vice-president and editor of Grosset & Dunlap, the American publisher of Mailer's book, told The New York Times: "I have to see the story and get the facts before I comment. Like most authors who intend to write a biography, Mailer used certain quotations from other books, but with permission, which permission we have . . ."

United States publication is scheduled for Aug. 1, and 300,000 copies of the book have already been printed including those for the Book-of-the-Month club. An excerpt appears in the July issue of Ladies' Home Journal.
